Board of selectmen to have an open seat

Diane Sullivan is not running for reelection

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Diane Sullivan

A seat on the Board of Selectmen will be up for grabs at April's annual town election as the result of incumbent Diane Sullivan's decision to forego a reelection bid. The school committee will also experience turnover of at least one seat, as incumbent Betsy Connolly has also said she will not run for reelection.

Sullivan, who has served two non-consecutive terms as a selectman and has been an outspoken advocate of the need for senior housing in Cohasset, said the town's lack of a solution to the problem weighed heavily in her decision.

"We still have not come up with an adequate supply of affordable senior housing," she said. "I would have run for reelection, but I can't commit myself to another three years when I don't know if I'll be here. It looks like I'll be another casualty of our lack of senior housing. It's too bad, because I love serving the town of Cohasset."

A selectman during the 1980's, Sullivan's desire to hold electoral office was reinvigorated in 1996 during debates about funding for sewers in her North Cohasset neighborhood.

She defeated then-conservation commission member and current selectman Tom Callahan, Wigmore Pierson, who now hosts the local cable talk show "Cohasset Talks" with Nan Roth, and Alex Koines, a member of Cohasset Concerned Taxpayers, for the seat vacated in 1997 by Peter Pratt.

The selectmen's representative on the Greenbush Mitigation Committee and Town History Committee, Sullivan has been outspoken about the dilapidated state of town schools as well as the need for senior housing. Though a senior housing committee has recently been formed, Sullivan said she has been bothered by the lack of con-

Haddad presents preliminary budget

New services a priority for FY '01

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For the first time in the last three years, the citizens of Cohasset may be able to look forward to new municipal services.

At Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad presented his preliminary town operating budget for Fiscal Year 2001, which begins this July 1.

In recent years, the town has had to go for operational overrides to maintain services, but Haddad said the FY 2001 budget will focus on providing better services without an override.

"We've pretty much presented operating budgets that maintain services and not cut anywhere," he told selectmen. "This year, we wanted to put in initiatives to improve delivery of services without an operational override."

According to assessor Cheryl Pooler, average valuations are estimated to increase by four percent for FY 2001, while new growth is estimated at $350,000. The tax rate is estimated to be $15.19 per $1000, which Pooler said would mean an increase of $253.67 on the tax bill of the average home in town, valued at $358,490.

The initiatives Haddad included on his preliminary town budget amount to $928,000, but will be offset by $813,000 in revenue generated from various sources. Thus, the new services suggested by Haddad would cost the town $115,000, an increase of 2.03 percent in the municipal budget. Haddad said the overall town budget, including schools, will see a 10 percent increase.

Law may curtail teen drinking

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Every year, the same awful scenario unfolds during graduation week at some Massachusetts high school.

Teenagers, partying with friends whom they will leave in a couple of months, become intoxicated. An honor student, with limitless opportunities in his future, decides he is just "a little buzzed" and jumps behind the wheel of his car. Upon seeing him leave, a friend asks for a ride home and gets in the passenger side of the car.

A horrific crash then takes the lives of the driver, passengers, or someone unfortunate enough to find themselves in the path of the intoxicated teenager. Lives are forever changed as a teen either loses his or her life or must live forever with causing the death of a friend or another driver.

Such a tragedy occurred on June 22, 1996, when 18-year-old Gregory Smith of Marshfield drove home drunk after attending a party in Cohasset celebrating his graduation from Thayer Academy in Braintree.

Citizen petitions due Tuesday

All citizen petition articles for the March annual town meeting are due at Town Hall by Tuesday, Jan. 11, announced Town Manager Mark Haddad at last Tuesday's selectmen's meeting.

Citizen articles must have 10 signatures to be included on the warrant.

Haddad said all other warrant articles are due Thursday, Jan. 13.

Garage to hold opening Saturday

The countless hours put in by tireless volunteers to make the new Teen Garage a reality will be visible on Saturday, when the Garage holds its grand opening.

Though Building Commissioner Bob Egan and recreation director Jack Worley were still hard at work putting on the finishing touches Tuesday night, the Garage will be ready for Saturday's opening.

All residents will be welcome to the opening, which will take place from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. at its 55 Rear South Main Street address. Refreshments will be served.

A dance for grades 6-9 will be held from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m., at which a DJ will play the latest in popular music. A $5 admission fee will be charged to offset the cost of the DJ.

Grant for auto body site

The water commission is applying for a grant from the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) to study a gas leak underneath the former Brown's Auto Body site at the corner of Depot Court and Ripley Road.

"There's not much known about the site and no one's been tagged as responsible for any leaking," said water commissioner John McNabb. "This grant would be a good way to find out exactly what's down there."

The Technical Assistance Grant could be worth as much as $10,000, according to McNabb.

School facilities committee schedule

In preparation for making its final decision on a chosen option for the Deer Hill/Middle-High School renovation project, the school facilities committee will embark on an ambitious schedule.

The committee will meet twice a week through Feb. 9, when it plans to make its final decision on a preferred option. All meetings are at 7 p.m. and will be held in the selectmen's meeting room. For those looking to keep up at home, the meetings will be televised on cable channel 3.

The schedule:

Mon., Jan. 10, Wed., Jan. 12, Tue., Jan. 18, Wed., Jan. 19, Mon., Jan. 24, Wed., Jan. 26, Wed., Feb. 2, Wed., Feb. 9.

Cunningham Bridge parking hearing

A public hearing will be held at the Jan. 25 selectmen's meeting to discuss the possibility of adding parking spaces at Cunningham Bridge, off Atlantic Ave.

All abutters have been notified of the possibility and were sent engineering reports.

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown said the traffic study committee would have a recommendation in time for the Jan. 25 public hearing.

Callahan suggests Pay-As-You-Throw

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, selectman Tom Callahan suggested the board study the possibility of adopting the Pay-As-You-Throw (PAYT) recycling system used in Scituate.

"I'd like the board to seriously consider PAYT," Callahan said. "Based on my experience with a family of four, I don't think anyone's going to spend $85 to $100 a year."

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who lives in Scituate, where each bag is $1, said the program has caused his family to start recycling.

"As long as you recycle, you can get by with a bag a week," he said.

Selectmen chairman Merle Brown said the recycling committee will be presenting an article on PAYT for inclusion on the annual town meeting warrant.

Smoke-free dining guide

A smoke-free dining guide for the South Shore has recently been published. This joint venture of local Massachusetts Tobacco Control Programs is a comprehensive listing of approximately 225 smoke-free eating establishments on the South Shore.

This guide will be available in locations throughout the communities of Abington, Braintree, Carver, Cohasset, Duxbury, Hanover, Hanson, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Kingston, Marshfield, Middleboro, Milton, Norwell, Pembroke, Plymouth, Quincy, Rockland, Scituate, West Bridgewater, Weymouth and Whitman.

This dining guide would not have been possible without the generous donations of Milton Hospital and the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, Massachusetts Smoker's Quitline.

If you would like a copy of the smoke-free dining guide, call the South Shore Boards of Health Collaborative Tobacco Control Program at (781) 829-4301.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Jan 11.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.
3. Uncover storm drains when possible.
4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.
5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

SCREEN GEMS

Often overlooked by homeowners, screens have long been valued by designers and decorators for their ability to add architectural interest or conceal less-than-attractive details. A screen can be used to divide a room or isolate a work zone. Positioned in a corner, a screen can create an interesting background for a tall houseplant. Guests like screens because they provide a certain degree of privacy for those who are spending the night on a pullout couch. Three-paneled, hinged screens can be created from vintage shutters or doors. They may be fashioned of fabric-covered panels. When matched with window treatments and underlined with padding, fabric-covered screens lend a look of sophistication. Wallpaper-coordinated screens also function without drawing undue attention to themselves.

There are many interior design techniques that can add comfort and visual interest to your home. At THE DESIGNING WOMAN, we can take the mystery out of creating beautiful and functional living spaces. Our goal is to work with you to create a thoughtful and individualized design plan and coordinate colors, patterns and fabrics. Do you work from your home? We can create a work space that meets your needs. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a consultation.

Groom hits utility pole en route to his wedding

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A Hull groom with a truckload of wine, beer, champagne and several 40-pound bags of ice ran into a utility pole at about 5:15 p.m. on New Year's Eve on the way to his wedding, police said.

Jonathan P. Stanton, 39, 49 Massasoit Ave. in Hull, was charged with operating under the influence of alcohol and forging an inspection sticker after the late-model, full-size Ford pickup truck he was driving hit a pole on the Hingham side of Hull Street at about 5 p.m., Dec.31.

"He was coming up Hull Street near the intersection of Pine when he said he tried to avoid a piece of pipe in the road," Hingham Lt. John Norkaitis said. "He hit a pole down there on the way to his wedding."

Stanton sustained bumps and bruises but declined medical treatment at the scene. After being booked at the Hingham station, he was released to his brother's recognizance, Norkaitis said.

The wedding was slated for 6:30 p.m. at the Holiday Inn in Rockland, police said.

"He was dressed and looking sharp when he left here," Norkaitis said.

Cohasset Officer William Quigley said the Cohasset station was flooded with 911 calls about the crash. He said the incident started on the Cohasset side of Hull Street but ended on the Hingham side where the pole is located. The Hingham/Cohasset town line runs down the center of Hull Street in that area.

Quigley said the ice and alcohol Stanton was transporting spilled all over Hull Street following the incident.

"There were only two or three bottles left (in tact) out of several cases," Quigley said. "There was ice everywhere."

Cohasset officers Quigley, Garrett Hunt and Det. Greg Lennon responded to the scene as well as Hingham officers David Horte and Eric Chessler, who made the arrest.

Stanton could not be reached for comment.

Feral cats back on health board agenda

Resident rescues colony

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The board of health, which has considered euthanasia as a solution to the feral cat problem on James Lane, plans to revisit the issue Tuesday.

But if Elsa Miller — founder of CATS (Cats Around Town Society) a rescue and feral cat education organization — has her way, there won't be much to discuss.

The Reservoir Road resident has taken matters into her own hands and has successfully tested, trapped, altered and removed 15 cats from the James Lane area.

Some residents have adopted four more and are taking care of them at their homes, Miller said.

"Basically the colony does not exist any longer," she said.

Miller is housing the cats she rescued in a large walk-in cage that takes up half her office at her business, Miller Property Appraisals, until they can be adopted. She plans to attend the health board meeting Tuesday in any case.

"I think it's important to understand the regulations and make sure they are fair to animals," she said.

In response to neighborhood complaints, the health board voted in November to trap the cats and have them put down if they weren't claimed within three days but has yet to implement the policy.

The board plans to discuss the issue again at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 11 after members have had the chance to review more information from town counsel and from a veterinary expert at Tufts. Apparently the board needs to enact a regulation using existing laws for stray dogs as a guideline.

In the meantime, Miller said she is encouraged by some of the calls she's received about CATS from concerned citizens who want to help.

Miller, who has hooked up with a lawyer supportive of the cause, hopes CATS will be able to provide education not only on managing feral cat colonies but on being a responsible cat owner. Experts say feral colonies are the result of cat owners that either abandon their pets or don't have their cats altered.

"We're hoping in the spring to go to the Statehouse to bring awareness to an ever-growing problem," Miller said. She thinks the state needs to enact legislation so towns can enforce the type of regulations with cat owners that they can with dog owners.

She pointed out the cat problem is huge. For example, she said, currently there are 30 kittens at the Scituate animal shelter alone and 50 to 60 cats that need adoption.

Miller is financing CATS with her own money. She has spent $2,500 on cages for the ferals, more than $1,500 on altering, nearly $400 on testing so far and that doesn't include food and litter.

"I'm using my second mortgage to pay for this," she said.

Miller is working with the feral cats she's trapped to tame them so they can be adopted.

She decided not to return them to the James Lane area for their own safety.

Police following bank robbery

May be connected to other area crimes

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset police continue to pursue solid leads along with the FBI to solve last week's bank robbery at the Abington Savings Bank located in Shaw's supermarket.

The Abington Savings Bank branch inside Shaw's on Route 3A was robbed at 4:49 last Tuesday afternoon by an unarmed, masked man who presented a note to the teller on duty.

Officer William Quigley said this week that investigators think the Dec. 28 robbery may be linked to a recent bank robbery in Weymouth and others closer to Boston.

Quigley said the perpetrator did not show a weapon but handed the teller a note saying "This is a robbery." He allegedly told the teller the note was no joke and to hand over the money fast, Quigley said.

A surveillance photo of the suspect was taken by a video camera at Shaw's and is posted on the Cohasset Police website at www.cohassetpd.org. The suspect, described by police chief Brian Noonan as a white, 5' 10" male, wearing a blue coat and dark pants, escaped with an undetermined amount of cash.

A video camera caught the suspect on film.

The Cohasset Police and bureau of Criminal Investigation (BCI) continue to work on a lead concerning last Tuesday's robbery.

"Sometime after the incident, we recovered a stolen vehicle at Stop and Shop Plaza," Noonan said. "The vehicle, which was running, was a red, 1995 Jeep Cherokee, and was stolen from a resident of Woburn. We took prints off the car, and we're waiting to get the results back from BCI."

Police get night-vision goggles

The Cohasset Police Association, a private non-profit group, has donated a pair of night-vision goggles to the department, association president William Quigley said.

The goggles are valued at about $4,000 and enable officers to see in the dark without having to use a flashlight.

Quigley said the goggles, which can be used by any officer, will help in night searches and enable the officer to work without being detected.

"The officer can conceal his or her location without using a flashlight which will help provide the element of surprise," he said.

"The night-vision goggles are like daylight. We can see you but you can't see us."
—Officer William Quigley

In addition to help in catching perpetrators in the act of committing a crime — the goggles could also be used on harbor patrols and in searches for a lost child or a disorientated elderly person who has wandered off into the woods, Quigley said.

"The night-vision goggles are like daylight," he said. "We can see you but you can't see us."

The money was raised through fund-raisers conducted by the association, Quigley said.

Join League of Women Voters

The Hingham League of Women Voters is inviting Cohasset residents interested in regional issues which affect both towns to join its local chapter. This membership drive is open to Cohasset residents of voting age, who are U.S. citizens. The League welcomes both men and women and offers family memberships.

The League encourages political participation through voter registration drives and studies on the local, state and national level. Past studies have focused on environmental policy, transportation, special education, recycling and trash disposal issues.

The League sponsors local and regional candidates nights, always popular and informative events. These nights afford political candidates a forum to give their views on issues in a non-partisan setting.

Cohasset applies for Dept. of Education grant

Money would offset SPED deficit

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Unanticipated increases in special education caused voters to appropriate $200,000 to cover the department's deficit at last month's special town meeting.

An extra $22,148, at the least, will need to be appropriated at the annual town meeting in March to cover the remainder of the $222,148 special education deficit for FY 2000, which ends June 30.

Town Manager Mark Haddad wants the money back.

In conjunction with Supt. Dr. Edward Malvey, Haddad has applied for a grant from the Department of Education for the full amount of the $222,148 special education deficit.

Haddad applied to the FY 2000 Federal Reserve Program, which awards a total of $5 million to Massachusetts regional school districts and municipalities which are facing unusual financial burdens in meeting their obligations under the Commonwealth's education reform law.

While Chapter 70 school aid is based on a formula to establish the amount of state funding which school districts receive, the Federal Reserve grants are awarded by Department of Education officials on a one-time, non-recurring basis.

Department of Education spokesman Darrell Presley said the program has received more than 100 grant applications, which were due Dec. 27. Awards will be announced in late January, with funds to be distributed in early February.

"We wanted to let them know that the selectmen and school committee are working together on special education, This is a joint problem. It's not just a problem for the school committee. We're all dealing with this."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Though school districts and municipalities generally submit separate applications for the program, Haddad said Cohasset sent one application to show how the special education deficit affects both the school department and the town.

"We wanted to let them know that the selectmen and school committee are working together on special education," he said. "This is a joint problem. It's not just a problem for the school committee. We're all dealing with this."

Communities applying for funds from the Federal Reserve Program must prove they meet one or more of five criteria: excessive enrollment growth, urgent building repairs, unanticipated special education costs, extraordinary and unanticipated financial needs, or excessive increase in required education spending. Haddad said the town meets the last two criteria.

"A deficit of this magnitude most certainly creates a significant and unreasonable burden on the school budget," he wrote in the grant application.

The grant program was begun in 1996 and awarded $15 million as late as 1998. In 1998, a total of 152 applications were received, requesting more than $51 million. Ninety-six of those requests received either full or partial funding.

In 1999, more than 100 applications were received for the available $5 million in grants. The state funded 63 cities and towns in 1999, including a $750,000 award to Milton, the only award exceeding $200,000.

Although Cohasset is often viewed as a tony suburb, Haddad said other towns with similar demographics have received funding in the past.

"Often, we get penalized for the value of our houses when we go for grants," he said. "But I've seen other communities in similar economic situations as ours which have received funding."

By waiting until the fall to budget for potential increase in special education costs, Haddad said an operational override will not be necessary this spring. He said it made far more sense to wait until special education costs are known before attempting to budget for them.

"We still have a lot of unknowns when it comes to funding for special education," he said. "We don't know what the state's going to give us. We don't know if we'll be successful with the $222,000 grant we've applied for from the state. Let's see what happens with special education in the summer and deal with it before the tax rate gets set."

Haddad said he has worked closely with school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo on the budget and both agree on the need to avoid an override this spring. DeGiacomo was present at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting and said he would deliver that message to school administrators and the rest of the school committee.

The increased services Haddad has included in his preliminary budget for FY 2001 include a Director of Finance, a part-time town planner, the FY 2001 salaries of the four firefighter/paramedics approved at last month's special town meeting, an additional police officer, the transfer of school maintenance to the DPW, a DPW laborer position, and a van driver for the Council on Elder Affairs.

Haddad had previously brought the Director of Finance proposal to selectmen before last fall's special town meeting, but removed the article from the warrant when it received opposition from some selectmen. To soothe selectmen's concerns about the position, Haddad has drafted two articles for the spring town meeting.

"The finance director will provide monthly financial reports to selectmen and the Town Manager, so selectmen are aware of the town's financial situation," Haddad said. "In addition, department heads, such as the finance director, will have the right of appeal to the Board of Selectmen when terminated by the Town Manager."

"We've pretty much presented operating budgets that maintain services and not cut anywhere. This year, we wanted to put in initiatives to improve delivery of services without an operational override."
Town Manager Mark Haddad

The two finance director warrant articles were designed to ease the worries of some selectmen that a finance director position would centralize too much authority under the Town Manager.

"I'm very satisfied that these proposed articles meet the concerns I had about a Director of Finance," said selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Under Haddad's plan, Town Accountant Michael Buckley would fill the finance director position, and would receive an $8,000 raise to an annual salary of $70,000.

Haddad has included $25,000 in the FY 2001 budget for a part-time town planner, a position which he said is fundamental toward helping the town plan for future growth.

"A town master plan is a priority of the selectmen," he said. "This individual will help us in that process."

The four firefighter/paramedics appropriated at last month's special town meeting are slated to cost the town $188,685 in FY 2001, but Haddad said the actual cost to the town could only be $56,000.

"There are three major ways to minimize the cost of these salaries," he said. "First, I'd like to eliminate the call fire department, effective July 1. I know this will be controversial, but with the increased staffing and the excellent mutual aid agreements we have with other towns, I don't think we need a call fire department. By eliminating it, we'd save $31,000."

Haddad said ambulance receipts for FY 2001 are estimated to go up by $80,000 due to increased billing for paramedic services. He also said the town could save $21,000 in overtime costs because increased staffing would reduce callbacks in the fire department.

To offset the cost of hiring an additional police officer position, the town has applied for a federal government grant, which would cover 75 percent of the salary of a new officer for the next three years.

"We will only fill the position if we succeed in getting the grant," Haddad said. "The position would cost us $14,000 in FY 2001, though the impact would be $51,000 after three years."

The transfer of school maintenance will necessitate increasing the DPW budget by $226,000 to hire three new employees, but the operating budget will not be impacted due to the savings the town expects to gain by outsourcing custodial services.

"If the bids come in higher than we expect, this proposal will have to be altered," Haddad said. "We'd have to sit down with the school committee and revisit the situation."

Haddad plans to add another position to the DPW, a laborer who would work at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF) on weekends. He plans to offset the cost of the position by raising sticker fees at the RTF.

"By raising the sticker fee from $85 to $100, we'll be able to generate an extra $27,000 to cover the cost of this initiative," he said.

The last initiative Haddad plans to add to the FY 2001 town budget is $12,280 for a van driver for the Council of Elder Affairs. While many in town have volunteered their services to drive seniors, Elder Affairs has been facing a shortage of drivers as the volunteer population has aged.

"They've been having a hard time getting enough drivers," Haddad said. "I think this will be $12,000 well spent."

While selectmen will likely suggest a number of changes to his proposal, Haddad seemed satisfied with the preliminary version of the FY 2001 budget.

"I think it's a solid budget," he said. "We'll put it on the agenda for the next couple of meetings and really get into the meat of it."

Cohasset joins Suburban Coalition

Group tries to lobby state for increased education funding

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

While one lone voice may be easily drowned out, a chorus is harder to ignore.

Such is the reasoning behind the Suburban Coalition, a group of 55 towns, which uses its combined efforts to get issues facing suburban communities addressed by the state legislature.

Needham selectman Jerry Wasserman, a member of the group's steering committee, met with Cohasset selectmen at their Tuesday night meeting. After hearing their concerns echoed by Wasserman, selectmen voted unanimously to join the Coalition, at a cost to the town of $100.

"I think this is a really important year for us to get together," said selectman Ronnie McMorris. "We'll be hurt by any reductions in education funding."

Wasserman said Cohasset is not alone in its frustration with the lack of adequate funding for its schools.

"Education spending in many communities is only 10 percent of the school budget," he said. "That's absolutely preposterous."

One of the four key areas in which the Coalition is seeking redress from the state legislature is in setting a minimum state funding level for all school districts of 25 percent.

"We're not arguing to take money from urban communities when we talk about that 25 percent minimum," Wasserman told selectmen. "First, they do have a harder time and, second, we wouldn't get anywhere with that approach. Most of the legislators are from urban districts or partially urban districts."

Wasserman said the solution for suburban towns is in increasing state aid for education.

> "I think this is a really important year for us to get together. We'll be hurt by any reductions in education funding."
> Selectman Ronnie McMorris

"We think the state should spend more on education, about 50 percent of the total public education spending in Massachusetts. We're among the lowest states in funding education."

While overall education spending is a problem for many suburban communities, Cohasset has been hit particularly hard by deficits in special education. The difficulty was illustrated at last month's special town meeting, when voters appropriated $200,000 to cover a special education shortfall.

Though changes in overall education funding may be years down the road, Wasserman said relief may be coming for some communities in regard to special education.

"There's a better chance of getting something done with special education than with education in general," he said. "There's a bill sponsored by Senator Antonini which would cap per-pupil expenditures for special education at three times the amount spent on other students. That could mean some significant money for our towns and our schools."

The Coalition's other chief goals besides increasing special education funding and monies for education in general are to give relief to seniors and low-income property owners and to increase highway funds for suburban cities and towns.

In Cohasset, rising property values have had an adverse effect on many seniors who are house-rich but cash-poor. As property taxes continue to rise, many seniors may be forced out of town because their fixed incomes do not increase by the same percentage.

Though other towns may have more land on which to build senior housing, Wasserman said seniors are being forced to leave many other suburban towns as well.

"I'm really worried about the stratification of our state," he said. "The aging population on fixed incomes are being forced out of the suburban towns. As a result, we're going to end up with only wealthy people in our towns and lose the diversity which we need."

While impressed with the idea of the Coalition, selectman Tom Callahan wondered whether it could have any real impact at the State House.

"This is the same philosophy we've been using for Greenbush, strength in numbers," he said. "But have you approached anything like a formal coalition in the legislature?"

Wasserman said there are legislative groups in their embryonic stages, but said one suburban voting block is difficult to form.

"There are groups developing that way," he told Callahan. "In fact, the MetroWest caucus is meeting tomorrow (Wednesday). An awful lot of legislators have mixed districts, however, so it's hard to have a united suburban voice."

Both school committees and selectmen in suburban towns are invited to join the Coalition. School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the school committee will vote on joining the group at its Thursday night meeting.

Member boards are encouraged to write to legislators or to speak at legislative hearings, Wasserman said. In addition, any town official from member towns are welcome at the monthly meetings of the group's steering committee in Wellesley.

"We need all local officials to get behind our goals," Wasserman said. "The more who speak up, the more we can get done."

Family tries to leap the last hurdle

Seeks special permit to finish building their home

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The wood framing of the home still stands at 59 Beechwood St., a monument to misunderstandings and legal battles.

Continuing a quest which began when he bought the 2.6-acre property in Aug. 1998, Anthony Nader of Quincy appeared before the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) on Monday night to request a special permit allowing him to finish building a home which has remained unfinished since last July.

The property had a legal building permit and wetlands permit when the Naders purchased the property, but the wetlands permit expired on Oct. 1, 1998, only a month after they had begun construction on the house.

After the permit expired, neighbors called the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), which issued a stop-work order.

At the time, Anthony Nader did not realize the expiration of the permit would mean he had to stop the construction on his house.

"I went on professional advice," he said last September. "I thought that once you started building, you'd be allowed to finish."

The Naders have been embroiled in litigation since last May, when the conservation commission denied a Notice of Intent for the project after three hearings. The ZBA hearings come as a result of a negotiated settlement between the Naders and the conservation commission.

The conservation commission had denied the project based on its interpretation of the Cohasset Wetlands Bylaw, a 1990 statute which had not yet been enacted when the commission initially approved a similar project by Thomas and Karen Coynes, the former owners of the property, in 1988.

An ice pond, which qualifies as a vernal pool, lies 2[illegible] feet in front of the partially-constructed residence. The wetlands bylaw states that "a 50-foot buffer zone may be required where none previously exists, due to previous destructive activities."

Arthur Goldsmith, Nader's attorney, said the settlement with the conservation commission sufficiently puts the issue of the vernal pool to rest.

"The house is just off of a man-made ice pond, but we have made an agreement with the conservation commission concerning the 50-foot buffer zone," Goldsmith told ZBA members. "We're seeking to have the special permit granted so the house can be completed and the settlement can be instituted."

As mitigation for the ice pond, Goldsmith said Nader had agreed to put in plantings and heavy grasses between the house and the pond.

With the wetlands issue seemingly settled, Building Commissioner Bob Egan said a ZBA special permit is the only obstacle remaining before Nader can resume construction on his family's home.

"If they get the special permit, they'll be able to start building again," he said.

Nader is seeking the special permit to build in a flood plain zone under a zoning bylaw which says a building may be constructed in a watershed district if the building does not present flooding or drainage problems and does not cause pollution or endanger the public health.

> "It's impossible for me to say you couldn't build a home on this property."
> Engineer Neil Murphy

Some zoning board members had concerns about building in a floodplain zone, but Neil Murphy, a consulting engineer hired by Nader, said very little construction will occur in the floodplain zone.

"The only work intended in the floodplain zone is the gravel driveway," Murphy said. "The whole home is higher than the floodplain zone."

When Egan suspended the building permit last July, he had gone by the town floodplain map, which showed the single-family dwelling to be inside the floodplain zone.

"Going by the federal, FEMA [Federal Emergency Management Agency] map, the house is outside the floodplain zone," Egan said. "The federal map is more accurate, and better describes the floodplain."

In arguing for granting of the special permit, Murphy said the Naders' single-family house will not have an adverse impact on the watershed.

"The drainage will go in the same direction it always has," he said. "The house is the only impervious surface on the property. Even the driveway will be gravel. The impact on drainage will be minute to non-existent. This property is not prone to flooding, and there will be no diminishing of flood storage capacity. The septic system is behind the house. It's impossible for me to say you couldn't build a home on this property."

The members of the zoning board had few questions after hearing Murphy's explanations, and decided to deliberate on the matter at their Feb. 7 meeting. They must file a decision by Feb. 15, meaning the Nader family could only be a month away from being allowed to finish building its home.

AROUND TOWN

SHIRLEY WILL BE MISSED

There are many heavy hearts around town this week. Cohasset lost one of its finest ladies!

Shirley Laidlaw was so full of love and good cheer, she could bring a smile to your face in an instant (she always had that lovely smile on hers)!

She adored her family, her friends and "her" town — whenever there was a task that she could do, she did it and did it well — a true lady, we will all miss you so much and send our love to you and your family!

LEARN TO PAINT

The South Shore Art Center has great news to report this week — Tracy Spadafora is going to teach a class in basic painting that will help students to learn all about color, light, form and composition. Tracy is known for her work and is willing to teach you how to observe with still life and photographs — she has taught many classes before and you can work in oil or acrylic. This course will be offered to beginning and intermediate level students.

We don't have the space to list all of her accomplishments, but she has taught at a number of art schools and her credentials are wonderful.

The class is called "Beginning Painting." Give the South Shore Art Center a call to get more information or to register — the number is 383-ARTS.

VISIT WITH OLD FRIEND

Dennis Buckley was in town last week with his wife and daughter. What a thrill to be able to see them! If you remember, Dennis was a fellow classmate and we had not seen each other since we graduated — he is doing well, is very happy and is surrounded by love!

Great to be able to sit and chat with you all (this is one of the "perks" of living in the same town forever. People know where you live and make an effort to look you up — don't you love it?)

Dennis lives in Newport News, Va., is a property manager, is well in the ranks in the military (Purple Heart) and life is good!

Great to see you and your family, Dennis!

SOME SAD NEWS

As this goes to press there is more sad news to report — Jack Buckley has passed away. Jack was a wonderful man, a true friend to many and well-loved by all who met him.

A huge family man, a wonderful friend (Jack and my Dad were good friends for years), a sense of humor that charmed all who knew him — a true football fan (especially when his sons played, he was so proud of them and all of their efforts!)

Plus, he was a fellow "Sandy Beach Bum" — could be sure that he would arrive with his chair and his paper and be delighted to be there —

Jack, you will be missed!!

OVERNIGHT PARKING

Don't forget, everybody, there is no more overnight parking on the streets of Cohasset! Our town manager, Mark Haddad, reminds all of us that until April 15 you cannot park for more than one hour between 2 and 6 a.m. — if we are lucky there will be no snow (I am the one with the shovel in my house), but it is a precaution that has to be in affect in case!

HOOP REPORT

The Cohasset basketball Skippers did a fine job in their tournament last weekend! Coach Ron Ford was so proud of his team (his team beat his former coach). If you want a thrill, go to one of the games and cheer on our team (and take a peek at the newly-restored basketball floor), it is a treat!

Hat's off to Geoffrey Nothnagle of Cohasset who received the Red Cross' Clara Barton Honor Award for Meritorious Volunteer Leadership for his service in a number of leadership positions. The recipient must possess outstanding qualities of leadership, innovation, compassion, vision, integrity and generosity.

Jeff has been a leadership volunteer with the American Red Cross of Massachusetts Bay for more than 20 years. In his leadership volunteer capacity, Nothnagle has served as Chair of the Greater Boston chapter, as a member of the Mass Bay Executive Committee, the nominating committee and the corporate campaign committee. He presently serves as Chair of the financial development committee for the chapter.

"Jeff has always been committed to the growth of the organization, not only its financial success, but also in helping to meet a community need," said Keith Motley, Chair of the volunteer committee. "During his term as chapter chair, the Red Cross Food Pantry was opened and today is the largest single food program in the Boston area, serving up to 1,200 people a month."

Call the local Red Cross at 617-770-2600 to become a volunteer.

BETTER THAN EVER

We bring you good news!

Ruth Pratt is doing better than ever, and we hope that she keeps up her good work!

Get well ASAP!

POLAR BEARS

Oh boy, it must have been cold for the Cohasset Polar Bear Club when they swam at noon on New Year's Day at Sandy Beach! That water is cold in the summer!

Under the direction of Gregg Helbock, Chris Mier and Mark Toomey, the new club "took a dunk" in the frigid water and hopes to set a tradition — BRRRR!

All right, everyone, it is the Millennium — and a brand new year — every year we are supposed to make a resolution — please resolve to let me know what is going on in your house, be it a new baby, an outstanding student, a birthday, an anniversary — should you have any event, we want to hear about it! Please give me a call at 383-0560. I will answer or call back ASAP!

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

I am sure that your family is like mine. Chicken seems to be a mainstay — I am always looking for a new chicken recipe as I get tired of "the same old thing" and I am always searching for new recipes!

My good friend Sue Fone sent me this recipe from Maine. I tried it and I loved it — I am sure that you will, too!

This is an immensely satisfying dish from Giuliano Bugialli's "Classic Techniques of Italian Cooking."

OREGANO CHICKEN BAKED WITH POTATOES AND TOMATOES

3 to 3-1/2 pounds small chicken thighs and drumsticks
1 pound potatoes
1 lemon
1 pound fresh tomatoes, ripe but not overripe salt and freshly ground pepper
1 garlic clove, peeled
1/2 cup olive oil
1/2 teaspoon red pepper flakes
1/2 teaspoon dried oregano

Clean and wash the chicken carefully. Peel the potatoes and cut them into thick slices (put slices in a bowl of cold water until needed).

Squeeze the lemon and reserve the juice. Cut the tomatoes horizontally into slices less than 1/2 inch thick. Remove the seeds.

Lightly oil a 13 by 8-1/4 Pyrex baking dish. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.

Layer the potatoes over the bottom of the dish. Sprinkle the potato slices with salt and pepper, then pour the lemon juice over them. Make a layer of chicken pieces over the potatoes. Put a tomato slice over each piece of chicken.

Finely chop the garlic. Pour the oil into a small bowl, then add the garlic, red pepper flakes, oregano and salt to taste. Mix well with a wooden spoon. Pour the sauce over the tomato layer in the baking dish. Place the dish in the oven and bake for 50 minutes to an hour.

Remove from oven, let stand for 2 minutes, then serve directly from the dish. Serves 4.

Hopefully you will like this dish as much as we did! Let me know!

Duck Derby a big success

The Duck Derby, held at "Satuit Brooke" off Front Street in Scituate, had more than 200 youngsters participate. The children lined the banks of the brook to see who's duck would be the first to swim over the finish line.

The first duck to swim over was Sam Ford's of Scituate. He received a one month pool membership donated by the Clipper Ship Lodge of Scituate. The second duck to swim over was Christian DiModica's of Cohasset. He received a $25 gift certificate to Buttonwood Books and Toys of Cohasset. The third duck to swim over the line was Griffin Gildea's of Cohasset. He received a $25 gift certificate to Young at Heart of Scituate.

The next four ducks to cross the line won their owners each a Wicked Willie donated by Wilburs of Scituate. Congratulations to David Hernon, Mathew Rosen, Grace Vanderlugt, and Nora McCormack. All children who participated received donuts from The Coffee Corner of Scituate, juice from The Scituate Marketplace, and coloring books and crayons from Bank Boston of Scituate and Cohasset.

The first annual Duck Derby was organized by the Scituate/Cohasset Newcomers' Club Community Service League. This event raised more than $1,000 for local community projects and was a success thanks to the following sponsors: The Clipper Ship Lodge, Buttonwood Books and Toys, Young at Heart, Wilburs, Scituate Market Place, The Coffee Corner, and Bank Boston. If you would like more information about the Newcomers' please contact Susan at 383-0688.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Thanks for speaking up

Before 2000 gets too far along, we still have some important 1999 business to attend to.

Some of the following names may be familiar to you, others may not be. But the people attached to these names all have one thing in common: they wrote at least one letter to the Cohasset Mariner in 1999.

A few wrote thank you notes to the people of Cohasset or organizations for their help or support; others complained about a decision or lobbied to have their views considered; while still others educated us about programs, problems or activities.

But no matter what the subject putting pen to paper to share your views with you fellow citizens is important. The First Amendment is close to our hearts here in the newspaper business and at no time do we appreciate it more than when ordinary citizens, like those listed here, take advantage of their Freedom of Speech. And what better vehicle is there than your local paper?

So here at the Mariner, we salute the following local citizens: Helen L. Crowley, Herb Towle, Pat Martin, Martha Hurtig, Joan Busk, Kevin O'Connor, Elizabeth Owens, Edward M. Guild, Owen L. O'Malley, R. M. Campbell, Fred Johanson, Maureen Jerz & Kim Maynard, Stephen N. Bobo, Jacqueline H. Moores, Nancy Hertig, Peter J. Barnicle III, Patience G. Towle, Daniel C. Cotton, Loenara C. The editorial pages of the Cohasset Mariner belong to you. It's where you can speak out or just say thank you to a citizen or group that went beyond the call of duty.

Sometimes it takes a good dose of courage to let your voice be heard, but we think it's worth it. Often one voice is all the inspiration needed to propel others to action.

Last year, the Cohasset Mariner received 129 letters to the editor from 103 different people, groups or organizations.

To those of you that have thought about writing and haven't, please reconsider. To those whom we hear from on a regular basis, keep writing!

There are lots of weeks to go in the New Year – which will be filled with events, decisions, happenings and controversy.

Let us hear what you think in 2000.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Historic' Hingham Square

TO THE EDITOR:

I find the frequent reference to "historic" Hingham Square very annoying. Assuming that the "square" is the area bounded by South, North, Central and Main streets, the most historic thing there is the rail bed and the town brook, which is directly below it!

I have reached the conclusion that Hingham has decided that it can create its own historical sites. I grew up in Hingham in the house at 629 Main St., which was purchased by my mother, Ruth Tolman, in 1925, two years after it was converted from a barn under the direction of Hingham architect, Godfrey K. Downer. As a barn, it was associated with the house which was at the top of the hill directly across Main Street. I recently noticed an historical marker on the front of that house declaring it to be the John Jacobs house, built in 1840! When we moved out of that house in 1950, we left behind a framed photo, taken around the turn of the century, of a mother pushing a carriage in front of that barn! I once knew the lady who was the baby in that carriage!

Diesel air pollution

TO THE EDITOR:

Selectman Martin Crane has informed us in a recent letter to the Journal (and Cohasset Mariner) that the Hingham lawsuit may be dropped and that "the purpose of which (lawsuit) has always been to impose rigorous environmental review and standards on Greenbush restoration." We are apparently dropping the lawsuit and Hingham by way of discussions with Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan will likely get an inexpensive 800-foot tunnel under Hingham Square and part of the Lincoln Historic District.

The rest of our neighbors along the Greenbush right of way will get a heavy diesel air-polluting train over the 43 at-grade dangerous and noisy railroad crossings. So much for imposing "rigorous environmental review and standards on Greenbush restoration."

Selectman Crane states in his letter, "The uncertainty of Greenbush has many not knowing which way to turn or when. It is time also to end their dilemma so they can plan for their future" in referring to the thousands of homeowners along the 17-miles of track. Short of everyone selling his or her home, I suggest satisfactory mitigation will be an impossible task.

As we wait for that potential buyer we might reflect on the real reason for this ill-advised project: namely additional transportation capacity, which will be fully utilized to serve Boston's need for more commuters to fill the seven million square feet of office space either currently being built or planned. Somehow that just doesn't seem right.

Video presentation on world yacht race

The Cohasset Yacht Club presents "Around Alone 1998-1999, Single-handed Around the World Yacht Race," a slide and video presentation by Robin Davie of South Carolina.

This is an evening of high adventure, thrills, and spills from Mr. Davie's three circumnavigations in the "Around Alone-Single-handed World Yacht Race," (formerly the BOC challenge). From the freezing wastes of the southern ocean, to the equatorial doldrums, to rounding Cape Horn under jury rig in the 1994 BOC Challenge and surfing more than 2,000 miles on a rudderless 50 footer in the 1998-1999 race, the presentation will be an exciting one.

The event is Saturday, Jan. 8, at 8 p.m. at St. Anthony's Parish Center.

Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset High School Marine Studies Program which has received annual support from the Cohasset Yacht Club for the past four years. This marine lecture series is open to the public and is free for students.

RSVP to Dave Crocker at 781-749-7580. The cost is $10 per person (students free) to be paid the night of the lecture.

Refreshments will be served after the lecture.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC records local senators' final roll call attendance records for the entire 1999 session. The Senate held 181 roll call votes during the 1999 session. BHRC records the number of roll calls on which each senator was present and voted and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total number of roll calls held. The percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

LIBRARY CORNER

User survey tally

The results of the user study done at the library during the week of Nov. 8 have been tallied. They show that 45 percent of library users are between the ages of 30 and 50. "That doesn't surprise me," said library director Janet Husband. "A lot of people think that libraries are for children and seniors. And that's just not the case."

As a group, seniors are good library users. When calculating Cohasset's total population, 13.7 percent are 65 or older (according to the 1990 census). In the library's survey, seniors over 65 comprise 23 percent of the users.

The top reason for the next 29 percent to visit the library was to "browse and find a book to read." After that, the next 24 percent came for a specific book. "I don't think that we need to worry that people in Cohasset have stopped reading books," said Husband.

Other frequently cited reasons for coming to the library were audiobooks, newspapers and museum passes. The library's computers are also becoming a draw for everyone. They are currently located in the reference room.

To the question asked if library users had accomplished their goal in coming to the library, 95 percent responded yes. "These figures give us a portrait of a heavily used and much appreciated library," said Patience Towle, Chair of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library Board of Directors.

Thank you

Recently, an article was written about a gift of "Sister Wendy's 100 Masterpieces," which was donated in memory of Vi Tuthill. We mistakenly reported about the donor and would like to apologize to all for this error. The Paul Pratt Memorial Library is grateful to Patricia and Jim Murphy for their generous donation.

For sale

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has a set of 1993 World Book Encyclopedia for sale at $35. It is missing a few volumes, but may be just what your family needs. Call the library at 383-1348 for more information in purchasing a real bargain.

The stars shine on

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian, is happy to report that more than 450 stars are now decking the children's room. Be sure to get your wish in for the New Millennium and take time to read the many wishes from the children of Cohasset.

Many of the children wished for world peace, an end to hunger and pollution, and help for the homeless. There was a poignant wish for the families of the Worcester firemen and their families. And there were others who showed great thought. "I wish that Y2K would wipe out everyone's bad credit rating," "I wish people could fly," "I wish it were summer," "I wish everyone could have a golden retriever," "I wish I could have my birthday two times a year" and many more.

Thanks go out to all the children of the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools for their special wishes.

Other news in the children's room — Story hour is full for the winter session with a waiting list. A spring session will be offered beginning in March. Call the children's room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at 383-1348 for information.

The Pinata Party Thursday, Dec. 30, was a great success with more than 50 people, children and adults, in attendance. The magician, Yo Joe, entertained all and the "cracking" of the pinata filled with small prizes and candy completed the holiday season festivities.

Happy New Year!

A look ahead at Y2K

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The more things change the more they remain the same, as we shall find out in 2000.

January - On the eve of the New Hampshire primary, Al Gore discloses that he invented television. The price of a hotel room in Manchester triples and the cost of a dinner at a restaurant doubles as presidential hopefuls crawl through snowbanks seeking votes and dragging the news media with their cameras and tape recorders behind them.

February - Town of Foxborough votes to ask for a Foxy Lady franchise near the stadium in order to keep fun-loving Patriots off Interstate 95 in the wee hours of the morning. "I wish I'd known that," says Moe Vaughn. "I would have played football and stayed in Boston."

March - Hingham historians discover that the corner of Main and North Streets was the place where Miles Standish asked John Alden to speak for him to Priscilla. Town files suit to prevent construction of the Old Colony Greenbush line within 100 yards of the historic spot.

April - Boston's baseball team changes it name to the Gentlemen's Wearhouse Red Sox after the clothing firm pays $50 million for the honor. President George Zimmer promises, "You'll like the way we play. I guarantee it."

May - Monica Lewinsky begins a new career as spokeswoman for White Owl cigars with a brand new slogan - "They don't always have to be smoked . . ." Responding to reporters' questions, President Clinton says he doesn't smoke White Owls and, if he ever did, he wouldn't inhale and, besides, he never had sex with that woman.

June - Fleet Boston Bank (or whatever it's called) merges with the few remaining independent banks, lays off 15,547 employees and announces a billion dollar profit for second quarter. Economists say the New England economy will continue at a high rate.

July - Gidget Churchill signs a contract to play herself in a made-for-TV movie called "Booze Cruise." Tom Cruise is the first choice to play Peter Blute. Danny DeVito is being considered for Sandy Tennant and Robert DiNero for spoilsport Governor Cellucci, the villain.

August - Wampanoag Indians discover that the "Squaw" in Squaw Island, Hyannis, is a derogatory term for an Indian woman and demand an immediate change in the name - either that or permission to open a gambling casino on the Cape.

September - Hollywood announces plans to make "Titanic II," picking up where "Titanic" left off. "I don't know how we're going to handle it," said the spokesman, "seeing as the ship was sunk. But, don't worry. We'll find a way. After all, there's still "Titanic III" and "Titantic IV" to go."

October-Gentlemen's Wearhouse Red Sox defeat the Amazon.com Cubs in the World Series, which is held in the 7,000-seat Boeing Aircraft Company, Inc., Stadium & TV Studio in Seattle after Boeing paid $100 million to host the games..

November - Al Gore is elected president and Republicans in Congress name Ken Starr as a special prosecutor to research the question - Can a president be impeached before he is sworn in?

December - The world prepares for a gala celebration of the third millennium, which, as everyone knows, begins Jan. 1, 2001.

CANDIDATES CORNER

McNabb announces reelection bid

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb has announced he will be a candidate for a second, three-year term on the Cohasset Board of Water Commissioners.

"The Water Commission is making great strides in our ongoing program to improve water service and water quality in Cohasset," said McNabb, who was first elected to the Water Commission in 1997. "I would appreciate the opportunity in a second term of office to continue these efforts and to build on our recent achievements."

These achievements, said McNabb, include: acquiring the land and local permits in 1999 for the second water storage tank, which should go out to bid this month, which puts the new tank on schedule to be completed by the end of 2000; hiring an engineering firm to develop a long range capital maintenance plan this year for the water treatment plant, and being awarded a grant to develop a comprehensive watershed protection plan this year to protect water quality.

John K. McNabb Jr.

McNabb said he was particularly proud of his role in some other key projects:

- continuing to replace undersized water pipes and rehabilitate the water distribution system as outlined in the 1996 Tutela Engineering long-range capital plan;
- preparing and sending out to every Cohasset resident in October the first Water Quality Report with information about water quality and a map of the watershed;
- performing an environmental study in 1998 which confirmed that pollution from the Cohasset Heights landfill was migrating toward Lily Pond; and
- developing the Y2K Action Plan for the Water Department that ensured that the Department was well prepared for the Y2K computer bug.

McNabb's also currently serves as one of Cohasset's representatives on the South Shore Recycling Cooperative, which he co-founded, and on Cohasset's Recycling Committee. He is a former member and Chairman of the Town Government Structure Committee and served as a Trustee of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, 1984-1987. McNabb is also Vice-President and co-founder of Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE).

McNabb is employed for Clean Water Action, a national environmental organization, as its Solid Waste Policy Director for the New England Regional Office. He previously worked for the state Department of Environmental Protection as a legislative liaison and has worked as an environmental consultant.

Bradley urges legislature to act

Garrett Bradley, candidate for state representative, wants the state legislature to send to Governor Cellucci for his signature the "Child Fatality Review Bill."

"This legislation would create 11 multidisciplinary teams at the local level and a state team to review all child fatalities in Massachusetts," he said. "Currently, we are the only state without some system for reviewing child deaths."

If enacted, this legislation would allow all professionals who had contact with the child prior to death (such as doctors, law enforcement, DSS, etc.) to offer their opinions on the cause of death, Bradley said. It would allow for a comprehensive investigation into unforeseen medical problems or possible criminal behavior that may have caused the death.

The bill, H4847, is currently stalled in the Senate.

"I urge our local legislators to do what is necessary to make certain that this bill reaches the Governor's desk as soon as possible," Bradley said.

VOLUNTEERS

Cancer drivers are needed

For many cancer patients, just getting to their treatments can be an obstacle to overcome. That's why the American Cancer Society's Road to Recovery program is currently seeking area volunteers to drive patients to and from their treatment appointments.

A patient receiving radiation therapy may need to travel to the clinic every day for up to six weeks. Someone receiving chemotherapy may need weekly treatments for as long as a year. Temporary side effects can make patients feel too sick to drive themselves or to take public transportation. For those without family or friends living close by, the lack of transportation may mean missing treatments that could save their lives. That is where Road to Recovery comes in.

If you have a car and are able to donate any amount of time between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays, you can really make a difference in the life of a cancer patient by becoming a volunteer driver. Drivers' availability is matched with the needs of patients who call. Limited reimbursement for parking, tolls and mileage is provided.

For more information, or to volunteer as a Road to Recovery driver, call your local American Cancer Society at (508) 584-9600. Information is also available through the Internet at www.cancer.org or through the American Cancer Society's 24-hour information line at 1-800-ACS-2345.

Cohasset blood drive is Jan. 12

The Red Cross has scheduled the next Cohasset Community Blood Drive for Wednesday, Jan. 12. January is National Blood Donor Month and the Red Cross depends on regular donations to meet the ongoing need for blood and blood by-products. Many people wait until they know someone who needs blood before they realize the importance of becoming a blood donor. It may not be your friend or neighbor who needs blood today. But someone does. In fact, every three seconds, someone in the United States needs a blood transfusion. Please keep in mind the simple truth that donating blood helps save lives.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset, so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls.

Please note the change in location. Because the Unitarian Parish House is undergoing renovations at this time, the Blood Drive will be at St. Anthony Parish Center at the corner of South Main and Summer Sts. from 2 to 7 p.m. As in the past, babysitting will be provided from 3 to 5 p.m. Ample parking is available. The Cohasset Community Blood Drive and the Red Cross wish to recognize and thank the congregation at the Unitarian Church for the generous use of their Parish House for the Blood Drive for so many years.

The Red Cross always counts on a good turnout when it visits Cohasset, so please respond, if possible, when a volunteer from one of the church, civic, corporate or social organizations calls. New donors are welcome and especially needed. To register and make an appointment for donating at a specific time or if you have any questions, call Carol Riley at 383-6215 or Kevin or Ann O'Connor at 383-1290.

crete solution to the problem.

"We've formed a bunch of committees," she said. "We hammer, hammer, hammer away, but nothing gets done. It's unfortunate."

In addition to Sullivan's seat on the Board of Selectmen, two school committee seats will also be open in April, as incumbents Betsy Connolly and Kathy Ofsthun are up for reelection.

In a phone interview Tuesday, Connolly said she will not run for a full term in on the school committee. She has been on the committee for a year, filling the position vacated by Joe McElroy, who resigned last year. She said she wanted to spend more time with her family over then next three years then a school committee position would allow.

"I just did the past year so that someone with educational experience could serve the remainder of Mr. McElroy's term," said Connolly, an administrator at Foster Elementary School in Hingham. "I still have my son, Sean, at home and he's got his four years of high school left."

Connolly said she still plans to support the proposed renovation project at Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle-High School as well as education in Cohasset in general.

"I've always been involved with education in some capacity, and I don't think that will change," she said. "I hope someone runs who will support the renovation project and is committed to providing quality education to the students of Cohasset."

Ofsthun, who has served one full term on the committee, said she is still mulling a reelection bid and will make an announcement regarding her future on the school committee in the next couple of weeks.

One town official who will seek reelection is water commission chairman John McNabb, who announced he will be a candidate for a second term on the water commission.

"The water commission is making great strides in our ongoing program to improve water service and water quality in Cohasset," said McNabb, who was elected to a three-year term in 1997. "I would appreciate the opportunity in a second term of office to continue these efforts and to build on our recent achievements."

McNabb, a former member of the government structure committee and a former library trustee, said he was particularly proud of a number of water commission feats, including acquiring the land and local permits in 1999 for the second water storage tank, which is on schedule to be complete by the end of 2000, and being awarded a grant to develop a comprehensive watershed protection plan this year to protect water quality.

Like McNabb, sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil will seek another term in office. Vanderweil said a number of projects are on the horizon for the town's sewer commission.

"The major challenge we'll be facing is to continue and complete the sewer construction on schedule and go ahead and hook up 330 equivalent dwelling units in North Cohasset and 750 equivalent dwelling units in the central sewer district."

Board of Health chairman Alix White, who has served two three-year terms, was unavailable for comment at press time about a possible reelection bid.

Those interested for running for any of the boards previously mentioned can obtain nomination papers at the Town Clerk's office, beginning Jan. 10. The last day to obtain nomination papers is Feb. 17.

In addition to the positions previously mentioned, three positions are open for the Trustees of Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and one position is open on each of the following elected town boards: the Board of Assessors, Planning Board, Cohasset Housing Authority, and Recreation Commission.

Law could curtail teen drinking

Committee is one measure aimed at reducing such tragedies.

The Social Host Responsibility bill, which has passed the state House of Representatives and is currently in the Senate Ways and Means Committee seeks to make adults responsible for allowing underage drinking in their homes, even if the adults do not provide alcohol to minors themselves.

"The bill seeks to expand the present restrictions on adults providing or conveying alcohol and beer to minors," said Rep. Frank Hynes (D-Marshfield) of the legislation which was begun by Gregory Smith's parents, Don and Donna Smith. "The bill says no one can host a party and knowingly and intentionally allow minors to drink. You'd be as guilty as if you physically handed a kid a beer."

Smith was killed when his car struck a tree on Summer Street in Marshfield at 3:20 a.m., not far from his home. His blood alcohol level at the time of his death was .19, according to medical examiner James Weiner. The .19 level was the equivalent of drinking 10 beers for someone of Smith's weight.

As in many cases of graduation-week deaths, the youngster killed was a model citizen. Voted "Most Spirited" in his graduating class, Smith was a soccer, hockey, and lacrosse player, had received a scholarship to attend Norwich University in Vermont, and planned a military career.

"He was going to fly jets," said his father, Donald Smith.

Donna Smith said the bill she and her husband have fought to make law is not designed to punish parents who may be out of town when a party occurs or are simply unaware of any underage drinking which may be going on.

"This legislation does protect homeowners who are not liable," she said. "The adults have to knowingly contribute to minors being able to drink."

Hynes said the Social Host Responsibility bill passed the House without any debate, good news to Don Smith, who has been working to get the legislation on Gov. Paul Cellucci's desk since his son's 1996 death.

"This is the farthest it's gone in three years," Don Smith said of the bill. "The key to the whole bill is what the current laws are lacking. As it stands now, an adult has to physically hand kids alcohol to be held accountable. There's nothing that relates to adults who are aware of underage drinking on their premises and allow it to happen. The courts can't do their job without a law in place."

The party Gregory Smith had attended on the night of his death was held at the Cohasset home of John Lennon, who was hosting a joint celebration of his son's graduation from Thayer Academy and his daughter's graduation from college.

At a July 1997 trial, Lennon was found not guilty on nine counts of providing alcohol to minors and one count of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Though teens at the party testified to drinking out of a keg at the party, six also testified to bringing their own beer.

Part of the charges against Lennon involved "delivery" of alcohol, which Judge Joseph Welch told jurors meant to transfer alcohol from one party to another. One juror said she found Lennon not guilty because prosecutors never proved Lennon served or encouraged teenagers to drink.

"If he had said to someone, 'Go get yourself a beer,' that would have changed the deliberation," said the juror, who wished to remain anonymous, after the verdict. "There was no direct evidence he gave those kids a beer."

When encountering the possibility of underage drinking, some parents may think it better to take keys from all of the teenagers' cars and allow them to drink in what the parents deem as a safe environment. Even the most vigilant, well-meaning parents, however, can find the situation impossible to control.

"Unfortunately, some parents believe the kids are going to drink anyway and try to provide a safe harbor for them to do so," Hynes said. "Even with the best of intentions, that attitude spreads a message of tolerance about underage drinking. Parents might even take the keys, but what if a kid has an extra key or the kid gets the key in the middle of the night, drives off, and gets killed or kills someone else?"

Cohasset police chief Brian Noonan, whose department worked on the Lennon case, said parents are not acting as nobly as they may think when allowing teens to drink in their home.

"It's high time people be held accountable for what goes on in their own homes," he said. "If a parent wants to allow their own child to have a drink in their home, that's their business. But they cannot and should not allow other minors to illegally drink alcohol. Too many bad things can happen."

Don Smith shared a story of such a tragedy occurring in Pennsylvania, which has enacted a Social Host Responsibility bill, and has seen a drop in alcohol-related deaths since the legislation was passed.

"There was a father who took all of the kids' keys and made them all sign something saying they wouldn't drive before he allowed them to drink," he said. "A fight broke out and one of the kids who was drunk wandered out into the middle of the street and got hit by a car. The father who threw the party was convicted. The kids don't have to be driving for something terrible to happen."

While he and his wife must live every day with the sobering reality of their son's death, Don Smith said his passion for the legislation lies in preventing other families from feeling the pain they've felt.

"We know that nothing is going to bring Gregory back," he said. "To lose a son or daughter this way is the most horrible thing you can imagine. No kid deserves to go this way. If this law passes and saves one life, all of our work will have been worth it."

A blast from Cohasset hockey's past

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High hockey coach Dennis Walsh stood in the lobby of Hingham's Pilgrim Arena, vigorously shaking hands with former players he hasn't laid eyes on in years.

Walsh, who has coached hockey at CHS since 1969 was looking forward to the New Year's Day Alumni vs. Varsity game, the first in 15 years. He would be "coaching" the 40-member squad, but admitted he hadn't worked out any game plan against his young, high school team.

"I'll just change the lines, that's all," Walsh said with a laugh.

The Alumni game's resurrection was the brainchild of booster member Joanne Pilczak, the mother of Skipper co-captain Matt Pilczak. Pilczak started looking up alumni hockey players last summer and made it a mission to find as many as possible.

She wound up tracking down 100 of 120 players dating back to 1975. Of those players, 40 said they would be able to attend. And though others weren't able to attend, they still donated to the booster's club.

"The alumni have been very generous to the team," said Pilczak. "I've really been overwhelmed by the donations we received. This is our thank you to them for being so generous. I hope the boosters will do it yearly."

She admitted spending an hour on the phone every evening during the summer months was more enjoyable than she first envisioned.

"I had a lot of fun doing it," Pilczak said. "I had some great conversations with the alumni and their parents. The phone calls were very enjoyable."

While the booster club is "not that formal" at this point, Pilczak is hoping five or six more parents will join next year. Despite the small number, the boosters have been "pretty active" in their second full season after several dormant years.

Last year, money was raised for team shirts and enough was earned in 1999 for the high school team to attend a two-day hockey clinic. The clinic included classroom instruction and scrimmages at Pilgrim Arena. Equipment was also purchased for this year's team.

"We've been pretty active," said Pilczak. "We've shown everybody that we can raise money for the benefit of the team."

The turnout was bigger than anyone expected. Because of the numbers, two games were played to give all the alumni a decent amount of time on the ice. Pilczak said the family members and friends' turnout of nearly 200 was better than those during the high school hockey season were.

Pilczak said one reason for the game was to draw attention to a high school hockey program that hasn't received its due. The alumni game, she hoped, was to bring recognition to the team.

As for the alumni players themselves, they were looking forward to playing the high school team and would like to see the game become an annual event. Alumnus Craig Mulcahy, an '88 graduate, watched the action of the first game from behind the Plexiglas surrounding the rink. Mulcahy said the years have gone by quick and jumped at the chance to play.

John Conte was also playing in the second game and was catching up on things with former teammates he hasn't seen in years. Conte, who graduated in '75, still remembers those 5 a.m. practices in the bitter cold of the winter months.

"I think it's great," Conte said of the reunion game. "We should do it all the time."

Hoop team fares well in tourney, alumni game

By David Ingber

The Holiday Classic Tournament took place in Cohasset on December 28-29. The Skippers finished in second place out of the four teams.

In the opening round, Cohasset got enormous performances from everyone, en route to a 57-49 triumph over the Scituate Sailors.

Cohasset was winning 25-24 at halftime, but surged in the second half to complete the win. From the first half to the second, Cohasset reduced its amount of turnovers from twelve to three.

Cohasset played both of its games, the first against Scituate, and the second against Cardinal Spellman, short-handed. Starting small forward Eric Shea was in Florida for a soccer tournament, and point guard Daniel Trowers toughed out the flu. Trowers' back-up, Matt Bilodeau, also was at the soccer tournament.

"Everyone stepped up for us," said coach Ron Ford, whose squad dropped the title game to Spellman, 59-55. "T.J. [Bilodeau] and [Craig] Parker had really big games."

Senior co-captain Parker scored 16 points and ripped down nine rebounds. Also, he hit some really crucial free throws late in the game that helped to seal the victory.

Bilodeau, a shooting guard, knocked down some big shots, including a three pointer that deflated a late run by the Sailors. It put Cohasset on top 50-43, and that was about as close as it got.

"Everyone stepped up for us. T.J. [Bilodeau] and [Craig] Parker had really big games."
Coach Ron Ford.

Senior co-captain Khalil Madyun played sparingly due to foul trouble, but still managed ten clutch points to help lift his teammates.

Senior Kevin Andrews, starting in place of Shea, had great penetration to the middle all night and perfect entry passes to the big men. Junior Trowers repeatedly dribbled past his man, then dumped the ball off inside, leading to his team-high six assists.

The championship game was Cohasset against Cardinal Spellman, the team that manhandled Dover-Sherborn in the preliminary round 74-37. Scott Mahan, Spellman's fearsome 6'6 point guard, went on to be the MVP of the tournament.

Spellman recruits their players from very large surrounding towns, such as Abington, Brockton, Halifax and Pembroke, each of which is known for having terrific basketball teams.

The game was a David versus Goliath match-up. Cohasset came into the gym with their nine, well-known players. When Spellman was introduced, 18 players came out to exuberant cheers from those who had taken the long ride to watch this basketball contest. Spellman players proceeded to jog around the court as if it were a victory lap.

A winning combination

By Joe Reardon

In the "old days" there would have been seven or eight girls barely making a whisper in the South Shore Community Center during a Cohasset High gymnastics practice under head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni.

Flash ahead to the next century and the scene in the SSCC is vastly different. Ardizzoni, of course, is still the head coach and can be heard giving words of advice and encouragement to the young gymnasts. But now there are so many gymnasts.

At last count the team's roster was bulging at the seams with 21 names, and they're not all Cohasset girls. Because of the low numbers in both programs, Cohasset and Norwell got the OK last year to merge and become the Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team.

With the merger and the fact that there is a slew of Cohasset sixth-graders waiting in the wings, the future of the C/N team looks bright for several seasons to come.

Eighth-grader Shelley Carter and seventh-grader Nancy Durkin are two of the gymnasts who will truly benefit through their high school careers. Both compete in the C/N dual meets, but their scores don't figure into the team's overall total. The experience factor, though, cannot be overlooked.

"It's been extra practice for me," said Carter of competing in meets. "I get into the high school experience before [my scores] count."

Durkin, who should make a big impact on the team when she is eligible to compete two winters from now, spoke of the even younger gymnasts and what lies ahead.

"The kids below us are really good," she said.

Thankfully, Ardizzoni doesn't have to coach 21 girls at every practice. Former Norwell High gymnast Kara Connerty coaches the team with Ardizzoni.

During the winter break, Carolyn Pratt and Chrissy Mitchell work with the younger girls, quite ably. Pratt co-captained the Cohasset team her senior year, while Mitchell was an outstanding gymnast for the Scituate High team.

Add their help to the Friday workouts that Ardizzoni holds for the middle-schoolers and it's obvious they are not being overlooked by the coaching staff.

"We watch their routines and the stuff they do," said seventh-grader Courtney Hurley of the older team members. "They give you ideas and it teaches you how to do stuff better."

The team's three captains, Carlie Carter and Kristin Sheerin of Cohasset, and Norwell's Patti LaCroix, also get into the coaching mix when it comes to helping the younger kids.

"There's so many girls that we help out with the routines," said Carter, Shelley's older sister.

The three girls realize just how important the up-and-coming gymnasts are in the grand scheme of the program and its continued success.

"It's good that we have this many girls because we want to get the program going again," said Sheerin, the team's best gymnast. "I like the bigger varsity team."

Carter doesn't foresee an eventual split back to two individual teams and is looking forward to next season already because the entire squad will be intact again. As for the youngsters, Carter said their involvement is off great importance.

"We need them there now because they're the future of the sport," she said.

C/N's season so far, has had its share of highs and lows. The team, though, is looking to garner momentum from several outstanding performances.

them" or "Look at the size of those guys."

However, Spellman and its entourage were in for a shock. Cohasset came out gunning, hitting some timely jumpers that excited the Skipper fans, and quieted Spellman's.

It was only when the score was 12-6 in Cohasset's favor did Spellman fans start cheering again when Mahan had eclipsed the 1,000 point mark.

After a two or three minute timeout to recognize the milestone, Cohasset kept on firing. Junior Doug O'Brien, without much experience at the point guard position, filled in extremely well for ailing Trowers (six points, four assists, and five steals). O'Brien had two outstanding drives to the basket, weaving through a crowd of Spellman players, that fired up his teammates and the crowd late in the first half.

More importantly, Madyun had done as good a job guarding Mahan as anyone in the first half. In fact, Madyun rendered Mahan so ineffective that he was pulled by his coach for the final six minutes of the half.

Still, even without his presence, Spellman scratched and clawed their way back into the game. At half time the scoreboard read "Cohasset 33, Visitor 31," as the Skippers jogged off the court to the locker rooms to thunderous applause.

Almost the entire second half looked like the end of the first, with both teams matching the other point for point.

T.J. Bilodeau had established his three point capabilities in the first half, proving his up-fakes to be very effective, en route to scoring 15 points.

Andrews also came up big, hitting some jumpers at tense moments in the game while pulling down eight rebounds. Trowers scored nine points with four assists and freshman Ben Lynner also figured in, converting two layups for four points.

In the second half, Mahan seemed to snap out of whatever was ailing him early on, and ended the game with 24 points and 15 rebounds. The rest of the game, the two teams traded basket for basket, and neither could pull away.

With under a minute, the score was tied 55-55. Spellman had the ball. They fed to Mahan inside who, instead of shooting it, made a great pass across the lane to a teammate who laid it in for a two point lead.

The Skippers tried to answer when T.J. Bilodeau passed inside to Parker, who attempted to draw a foul. However, much to Cohasset's chagrin, no foul was called. On the ensuing rebound, Cohasset quickly fouled Spellman's John McSherry. He sank both his foul shots, and that was how the game would end, 59-55.

Though it was disappointing to go all that was but still lose, everyone seemed pleased about the way Cohasset played. Playing a tight game against the much bigger and heavily favored Spellman team demonstrated a lot of desire and hard work from the Skippers. Any Cohasset player can rattle off Ford's Five Rules of Defense, including the most important one— "play with your heart."

Bilodeau was named Cohasset MVP for his outstanding two games, scoring 31 points in the tournament.

Scituate soundly defeated Dover-Sherborn 71-60 in the consolation battle for third place.

In addition to the Holiday Classic Tournament, Cohasset held its annual Alumni game on December 30. Former varsity players returned from college to challenge the present varsity team. Featured were familiar faces like 1,000 point scorer Paul-Michael Quinten, six foot seven powerhouse Ryan Bishop, and one man highlight reel Jared Hardwick, whose dunks and drives to the basket once lit up CHS.

The game was nearly as exciting as the two previous ones, as the Alums barely eked out the victory 93-91. Hardwick hit two free throws with nine seconds remaining.

Playing for the current varsity team, junior varsity coach R.J. Mighaccio's desperation three point attempt at the buzzer came up short.

The entire week was exciting, competitive and most of all fun. And hey, there's always next year.

at the former Winter Gardens on Route 3A. Though the rink has been long-since closed, Conte said the years have passed by quickly since he was wearing a Cohasset hockey jersey.

"It doesn't seem that long ago," he said, then added with a laugh, "It's going to when I get on the ice."

Pilczak said a number of players joked about how out of shape they were, though they looked surprisingly fit. She said one player made an initial donation than added more money to ensure that an oxygen tank would be on hand.

Pat and Mike Reynolds, who were co-captains in '96 and '93, respectively, were very much in hockey shape and playing in the New England Senior Hockey League.

"I think it's a great idea," Pat said of the alumni game. "The turnout tonight is unbelievable."

Pat joked that there were some problems though. "I know a lot of guys in the locker room haven't skated in a while so it should be pretty interesting," he said.

Mike was familiar with many of the team members, and, like his brother, was impressed with the event.

"I didn't think the turnout would be as good as it is," Mike said. "There are more fans here than when I played in high school. I skated with some of these guys since I was in seventh grade."

"I think we're doing a lot better than I thought we were going to do," Sheerin said.

C/N is coming off an upset victory over Scituate High and had a meet slated against Hanover High on Jan. 5 at home. The girls are concentrating more on reaching individual and team goals. If they fall into place, the wins should come. In short, the captains are smart enough to know that the win over Scituate, no matter how big, was still just one win with more tough games ahead.

"There's always the drive to get a higher score," Sheerin said. "Basically, we want solid races."

Norwell's LaCroix is the oldest member of the team and a big reason the programs were combined. Just a junior, she feels very much at home competing alongside her Cohasset teammates. One of two Norwell girls on the team, LaCroix has adjusted well to what has been a big change in her extracurricular routine.

LaCroix said the win over Scituate was a huge confidence builder for a very young team.

"Once we beat Scituate, we knew we could do it (win meets) if we hit our routines," said LaCroix. "But we're definitely not cocky. Everybody just has to loosen up, go out and have fun.

"It's fun for me. I tell the kids just to have fun with it and eventually you'll improve."

Ardizzoni still enjoys working with the girls and seeing them improve with time. With every meet comes a new challenge. And she never counts C/N out. The win over Scituate was a perfect example. C/N's stronger performances, on two of the key events made the difference.

"You never know what's going to happen on the bars and beam," Ardizzoni said.

What is perfectly clear is that the C/N merger has been nothing but positive and the full affects have yet to be seen. The good days are back, with still more to follow.

Henry E. Brennock

Henry E. Brennock

Henry E. Brennock Sr., 78, of Cohasset, the town's resident Santa Claus, died Dec. 31 at home of natural causes.

Mr. Brennock played the role of Santa for more than 50 years for community groups and at town events. He and his wife, Mary E. (Marks) Brennock, were referred to as Mr. and Mrs. Santa Claus.

The tradition began when his children were very young, said Mr. Brennock's son, Ed Brennock Jr. of Cohasset.

"When we lived in Weymouth, he'd dress up on Christmas Eve and visit the kids in bed. He'd tell us to be good and go to bed, and give us a little gift. It just grew from there," Ed Brennock said.

In Cohasset, Henry would play Santa for every community organization that asked him. No matter how many people called to ask, "I don't ever recall him refusing anyone," Ed Brennock said. "And he never took a dime for it."

Henry was the Santa Claus in Cohasset's annual Jingle Bell Walk, which began in 1994.

As Santa, Henry would arrive via boat at the Fisherman's Pier at Government Island, accompanied by Mrs. Santa; Frosty the Snowman, played by daughter Maureen; and Rudolph, played by his daughter Kana and niece Judy Rockwell.

Once the entourage arrived, a fire engine would take them to Cohasset Center, where Santa would distribute Christmas bells to children and pose for pictures.

"The whole family was in the Santa cast," Ed Brennock remembered. "Every grandchild had been an elf" as a child.

Mr. Brennock retired in 1984 from the Joseph Osgood School in Cohasset, where he was the head custodian for more than 27 years. Years ago, he would dress as Santa for the kids at Osgood School, too.

Mr. Brennock was also a carpenter and built houses.

A lifelong Cohasset resident, he was a graduate of Weymouth Trade School.

He was a communicant of St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset.

A Navy veteran of World War II, he was a member of the Cohasset American Legion Post 118 and the Cohasset Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. Brennock enjoyed bowling, camping and square dancing.

In addition to his wife and son, Ed, he leaves a son, Navy Capt. Daniel J. Brennock of Uxbridge; two daughters, Maureen "Punkie" Yalenezian and Catherine (Kana) Taft, both of Hanson; a brother, William Brennock of Manomet; a sister, Mary Brennock Thompson of Scituate; 11 grandchildren, five great-grandchildren and seven step-grandchildren.

A funeral Mass was celebrated Jan. 5 in St. Anthony's Church. Burial was in Woodside Cemetery.

The McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home handled the arrangements.

In lieu of flowers, donations in Mr. Brennock's memory may be made to the St. Anthony's Church Building Fund, 129 South Main St., or to the Cohasset Community Center, Main St., Cohasset 02025.

Two car accident slows 3A traffic

An accident Monday afternoon Route 3A near Sunrise Assisted Living blocked traffic for about 15 minutes in both directions.

According to officer Shelly Peters of the Cohasset Police Department, Arlene Macker of Marshfield struck Lynn Blanchard of Norwell from behind as Blanchard slowed down to take a left turn into Sunrise.

"Blanchard was driven quite a distance," Peters said.

Both women complained of neck injuries and were taken to South Shore Hospital. Both were treated and released.

So you want to name a boat?

Club using new fundraising technique

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset Sailing Club's 12-foot sailing boats, called its Mercury fleet, are now over 20 years old. If the boats could talk, they could regale the town with memories of teenage sailors now in their 40's and of countless laughs shared among friends. However, after two decades of use, the most the boats might be able to say is 'ouch.'

"We usually educate 200 kids a year in the Mercury boats," said Ann Musto, vice commodore of the Cohasset Sailing Club, which is located on Government Island, adjacent to the Minot's Light Replica. "They get used really hard. We try to work on them over the summer, but it's past the point where we can repair them ourselves."

Due to concerns of safety, reliability, and performance, the club's executive board has determined that the boats cannot last another season without needed repairs.

""We're going to get them re-gel coated, and fiberglassed," Musto said. "To buy 10 new boats would cost almost $100,000. By renovating them, we'll only have to spend $20,000."

The non-profit group has not held a fundraiser of any kind since the money was raised to buy the Mercury boats in the early 1970's. To raise the money, the group's board has come up with an interesting fundraising idea. Taking a cue from sports stadiums, whose naming rights are often sold to the highest bidder, the club is hoping to interest local businesses in buying the exclusive naming rights to one of the 10 Mercury fleet boats for a tax-deductible donation of $2,000.

"I don't know what company wouldn't want a $2,000 write-off and get naming rights to one of the boats," Musto said. "We want to make the deck colors really recognizable so it would be easy to see who named each boat. For instance, a Red Lion Inn-supported boat could be bright red and it would really stand out. I can imagine all of the different-colored boats out in the harbor, sparkling and looking brand-new. It's going to be fantastic."

One person in town has taken it upon himself to name one of the boats. Bill Kelley, 43 Forest Avenue, decided to sponsor a boat to give back to the club which has provided his family with so much joy through the years.

"All of my six kids went through the program, and I did myself as well, though that was a ways back," said Kelley. "Four of my kids worked there at one time or another. I think it's a great program. It promotes discipline, and a cooperative spirit."

Kelley, who was president of the Sailing Club in the early 1970's, said he felt an obligation to help when he heard of the state of the Mercury fleet.

"I thought we ought to become involved," he said. "We have a long history with the club."

While other Sailing Club enthusiasts may be unable to match Kelley's $2,000 contribution, Musto suggested a combined effort between friends or neighbors could be made to name a boat.

"It would be wonderful if people got together as a group and named a boat," she said. "People can feel like they have some ownership in the club."

Contributors would also receive recognition on a plaque in addition to the naming rights on one of the Mercury boats. The sails of the boats are only three years old, and will not need to be replaced for another three to four years.

Any business, group, or individual which contributes to the restoration of the Mercury fleet will be part of a rich nautical tradition dating back to 1964, when the club was founded by Herb Towle, among others.

"I sailed with a fella named Joe Lee on the Charles River when I was young," said Towle, who is now 81 years old. "I wanted to copy what he did after I got back from World War II. I wanted my kids and other kids to have the opportunity to learn to sail. We got people to donate because a lot of the parents of those kids didn't have the money to take the sailing courses."

When Towle began the Sailing Club 35 years ago, he could not have imagined how many youngsters would pass through its boats.

"About 8,000 kids have gone through it since it started," he said. "One student has become an instructor at the Naval Academy and another girl took a schooner all the way to Nova Scotia. We've had a lot of good kids who have gone on to do very well."

Musto said one of the main reasons the board is so excited about restoring the 10 Mercury boats is that it will allow the club to continue teaching kids to sail for years to come.

"We need to encourage people to keep sailing," she said. "I hope that the people of Cohasset will back the project from both a business and community standpoint so we can continue to do that. There are so many people in town emotionally vested in the Sailing Club."

Another generation of Kelleys may be next to benefit from the Sailing Club's programs.

"All six of my kids went through there, but none of our grandchildren have yet," Bill Kelley said. "Some of my kids still live in Cohasset, so hopefully at least a couple of my grandchildren will take part as well."

Rep. Murray to step down at end of term

State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, with her son Nate Murray at her side, listens for the latest results at her campaign headquarters on election night in November 1998.

Considers Cohasset selectman's race

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

After 24 years, incumbent state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray has decided not to seek reelection this fall.

The 75-year-old Cohasset Republican, who is known for unparalleled constituent service, represents the Third Plymouth District consisting of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Although she still loves the job, Murray said the time has come to step aside.

"The time has come for younger people to throw their hats into the ring," Murray said. "But I hope whoever comes along after me takes care of the people."

Murray's decision opens the door for other Republicans who were reluctant to run against the popular incumbent in their own party. So far two Hingham residents have expressed interest.

The first out of the gate is Mary Anne McKenna, 35, who officially announced her candidacy as soon as she got word Murray wouldn't run.

"Mary Jeanette is doing more than an adequate job and did not need a replacement but now that she will be out of office — we need someone, who will carry on her tradition of helping her constituency," said McKenna, who works in pharmaceutical research. It would be McKenna's first try at elected office.

"The time has come for younger people to throw their hats into the ring. But I hope whoever comes along after me takes care of the people."
— State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray

Maureen Devine, 48, who is midway through her second term on the Hingham School Committee, said it was easy to contemplate running as long as Murray continued to serve.

"As long as Mary Jeanette's been running, it's been easy to sit around and speculate if this and if that," said Devine, who is an attorney. "But now I will have to give some serious thought before deciding. I am still on the school committee and I have family and work obligations to think about."

Hingham selectman Martin Crane, who had considered a run, now says it's unlikely he will be a candidate.

But whomever the Republican nominee eventually is — he or she will likely have to face off against declared Democratic candidates Michael Holden, a Hingham selectman, or Hingham's Garrett Bradley, the former county prosecutor who gave Murray the race of her political career in 1998.

Holden described Murray's announcement as "an exciting turn of events."

He said he runs into people on the campaign trail who are fiercely loyal to Murray.

"They say she's a long-time friend

Call firefighters may be eliminated

Money to offset paramedic costs

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The four new firefighter/paramedics appropriated by voters at last month's special town meeting may have signaled the end of the town's call fire department.

To help offset the $188,685 cost of the firefighter/paramedics in Fiscal Year 2001, Town Manager Mark Haddad has proposed eliminating the call fire department, which he said would save the town $31,000.

The $31,000 appropriated for the town's call fire department is divided between the members of the call department annually depending upon the number of incidents each reports to.

"We're paid once a year," said call firefighter John Bellefontaine. "We write a report every time we go to a fire call. At the end of the year, they figure out how many calls each guy reported to and they divide up the money."

"When you're dealing with a budget, you have to have priorities. I feel paramedic care provides better service to the residents of Cohasset than does a call fire department."
—Town Manager Mark Haddad

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln said each call firefighter was paid approximately $60 each time he responded to a call.

'Pay As You Throw' is back on agenda

System successfully used in Scituate

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If at first you don't succeed, try, try again. That's the mantra of selectman chairman Merle Brown, who is one of those bringing the "pay-as-you-throw" or "buck-a-bag" waste disposal system back for another go-round in Cohasset.

The pay-as-you-throw system is already underway in Scituate, where residents pay an annual sticker fee of $50 for use of the town's dump and receive 50 30-gallon trash bags or 100 15-gallon trash bags.

The program is designed to increase recycling by having residents pay for solid waste management based on the amount of garbage they discard, rather than through a flat fee or property tax.

The garbage bags residents receive when paying their sticker fees would be stamped or otherwise marked to distinguish them from other garbage bags. Only the new bags would be allowed at the RTF. In Scituate, the bags are clear and stamped with 'Town of Scituate.'

Once the original allotment of bags runs out, additional 30-gallon bags would be $1, while additional 15-gallon bags would cost 50 cents.

"We'd like to do pretty much what Scituate does," Brown said. "I definitely feel pay-as-you-throw is the way to go. Everyone on the recycling committee is also for it. We've come to a plateau in our recycling. People aren't going to increase recycling unless it's to their benefit to do so."

"As far as I know, it's shown to increase recycling and decrease the amount shipped to SEMASS. I don't know what's the big deal with trying it."
—Selectman Tom Callahan

Pay-as-you-throw was first suggested by members of the recycling committee in early 1997, and the committee had hoped for a vote on the program at that year's annual

During one of this winter's recent cold snaps, former Olympian Alice Cook with her daughter Kelly Voke skate on the duck pond at the town common.

An Olympian in our midst

Represented USA in pairs skating in 1976 Winter Games

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Perhaps you've seen her skating with one of her three kids on the pond next to Cohasset Common. You may have noticed that she skates awfully well, with an ease unlike that of the typical suburban mom. She must have skated when she was young, you think. She was probably pretty good once.

Pretty good doesn't begin to describe the figure skating career of Alice Cook, who lives in Cohasset with husband Patrick Voke and their children, Kelly, 8, Brendan, 6, and Mackenzie, 4.

Cook's figure skating career took her all the way to the 1976 Winter Olympics in Innsbruck, Austria, where she represented the United States in the pairs skating competition with partner Bill Fauver. Only a teenager at the time, Cook said the experience resonates with her more now than it did then.

"Looking back on it, I really didn't realize the magnitude of it at that age," she said. "Of course, I remember the opening ceremonies and everything, but I take a lot more pride in it now than I did then."

"Looking back on it, I really didn't realize the magnitude of it at that age. Of course, I remember the opening ceremonies and everything, but I take a lot more pride in it now than I did then."
— Former Olympic figure skater Alice Cook

Growing up in East Lansing, Mich., Cook started competing in singles at the age of nine and won the bronze medal in the national novice competition at age 13. A little before her high school graduation, she moved to Wilmington, Delaware to train full-time under noted coach Ron Ludington.

"My ice time was from midnight to 4 in the morning," she said. "It was a tough schedule, but I loved skating."

Though she had performed in singles since she first entered figure skating competitions, Cook switched to pairs when Fauver came looking for a partner.

"In skating, there's like 25 guys to every girl," she said. "He really had his pick of partners. I was surprised when he picked me."

Despite her status as a relative newcomer in pairs skating, Cook and her partner soon found themselves among America's elite pairs.

"The first year we paired together, we won the East Coast championship and finished fifth in the nationals, which surprised some people" she said. "The next year was Olympic qualifying. We were only sending two teams to the Olympics, so Bill and I were a real long shot to make it."

With four teams seemingly ahead of she and Fauver in the Olympic pecking order, Cook had no grand plans of making it to Innsbruck for the 1976 Winter Games.

In competition, however, the unexpected sometimes occurs as underdogs perform their best and favorites falter. While Cook and Fauver shined on the biggest stage of their skating lives, some of the favored pairs stumbled. Cook soon found herself on the brink of achieving a dream which only a tiny fraction of elite skaters can ever realize.

School coffees slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during January, February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Votes to join coalition

Echoing the action of selectmen, the school committee also voted unanimously to join the Suburban Coalition, a group of 55 towns that will lobby the legislature for increased state aid to education.

Last week, Jerry Wasserman, a member of the coalition steering committee, met with selectmen who were unanimous in supporting Cohasset's membership at a cost to the town of $100.

School committee member Betsy Connolly said communities need to unite to let legislators know there has to be a different funding formula to determine how state aid is dispersed.

The school board is hopeful that with a concerted lobbying effort positive action will be taken on a bill sponsored by Sen. Robert A. Antonioni (D-Worcester) that would cap town's per-pupil expenditures on students who receive special education at three times the amount spent on other students. Cohasset has been hit hard by rising special education costs, illustrated at December's special town meeting when voters appropriated $200,000 to cover a shortfall in special education.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun said the more towns in the coalition, the more clout it will have at the State House.

Field trip is approved

On the recommendation of middle-high school principal Curtis Collins, the school committee approved a field trip request from the music department.

Collins said the May 19-21 trip to Toronto that involves a performance and workshop would include the chorus and likely the instrumental music students. The group plans to stop at Niagara Falls on the way home.

School committee member Betsy Connolly gave the trip high marks.

"What a wonderful experience for our students," she said. "Thanks to the staff for providing the opportunity for the kids to share their talents."

As a policy, the school committee is asked to approve out-of-town field trips and ones that involve travel over water.

Boiler repairs to cost $20,500

Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey has been keeping his fingers crossed that this winter's mild weather will continue.

That's because the boilers at the middle-high school are literally falling apart.

As a stopgap measure, the school committee voted to ask the advisory board for a transfer of $20,500 for repairs.

Malvey explained that one of the three boilers at the middle-high school has been out of service for sometime and is used for spare parts to keep the other two running which operate as a back up for one another.

But one of the operating boilers had to be shut down last month due to multiple leaks and then the sole remaining boiler went down due to the increased load.

"When we returned from vacation, boiler number one was down," he said. "It was fortunate that it was warm enough on Monday and Tuesday but when we got into Wednesday, the temperature dropped and that gave us all concern."

Malvey said he authorized emergency repairs to boiler number one that started producing some heat by midday Wednesday.

"You could hear cheers throughout the building," he said.

Although the immediate problem is solved with boiler one, boiler two needs an estimated $15,000 in repairs. The remaining $5,500 needed will pay for work already done.

"My concern is there is no backup if boiler number one goes down," Malvey said. "Winter will hit sometime."

Girls' hoop team cuts

At last week's meeting, school committee member Stephanie Noble said the middle-school girls' basketball team had major cuts. She praised all the girls who tried out.

"Middle school teams are not as inclusive as we wished," she said, alluding to budget cuts that school athletic programs sustained this year due to fiscal constraints.

Parking hearing is cancelled

A Jan. 25 public hearing to discuss the possibility of adding two parking spaces at Cunningham Bridge has been cancelled because the project will not go forward.

Due to the $10,000 cost of the project and objections from abutters and Police Chief Brian Noonan, the project has been halted in its tracks.

"I was the one in favor of this originally, because I thought it would be fairly simple," said selectman Ronnie McMorris. "As I've learned, however, nothing in government is ever simple. We would have to take down trees, put in filling, and there were potential legal issues with abutters. It's not worth it."

Holly Hill Farm applies for grant

At the suggestion of selectman Tom Callahan, the board agreed to sign a letter in favor of Frank and Jean White's application for a grant to obtain funding for educational programs at Holly Hill Farm.

"At least eight students from the middle-high school are going to be doing some work down there," Callahan said at the selectmen's Tuesday meeting. "It's a resource available to our students and there's no matching town funds."

Callahan said the conservation commission signed a similar letter in support of the grant application.

Police/fire station

Selectman Ronnie McMorris announced the appointment of Jean Hajjar, 30 Heather Dr., to the police/fire station study committee.

Selectman unanimously approved Hajjar's appointment to the committee, which will hold its initial meeting Thursday night.

Creative financing worries special education advocate

Objects to approach to fund $300K deficit

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The plan to finance the fiscal year 2001 school budget has drawn opposition from within the school department ranks.

Former school board member Maureen Jerz — who serves as co-chairman of a parent advocacy group for special education — delivered an angry letter to the school committee last week objecting to the budget approach.

Although budget talks for FY01, which starts July 1, are still in their infancy, the plan floated by Town Manager Mark Haddad and the school department is to present to town meeting a total school budget that is about $300,000 less than what they think is needed.

The shortfall — which is subject to change depending on state aid figures and other factors — would likely be made up with free cash in the fall.

This would avoid the need for an operating budget override this spring which, selectmen say, would surely fail at the polls and might jeopardize passage of an estimated $40 million debt exclusion to pay for rehabilitation of the Deer Hill and middle-high schools.

In order to present a balanced budget, Haddad is recommending to selectmen a school budget of $9.2 million, which is level-funded apart from contractual salary increases, when the schools need $9.5 million. The additional $300,000 needed cannot be absorbed within the total town budget without an override of Prop. 2-1/2, the state law capping the amount a municipality can raise its tax levy in any given year.

The school committee will conduct a public hearing on the budget at 7:30 p.m., Jan. 20, at the middle-high school.

By law, school budgets are approved by voting the bottom line amount and not by line item. So officials would be careful to make no mention of special education in the warrant article to make up any shortfall in the school budget at the fall town meeting. However, the soaring cost of SPED would be singled out in town meeting discussion.

And in the proposed school budget presented last week, the $300,000 expected shortfall for discussion purposes was attributed to SPED including tutoring, contracted services, special needs transportation, and day and residential tuition costs.

"We will meet that obligation, no matter how it is funded."
— Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey

At the school committee meeting, Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey was careful to point out that budget talks are preliminary.

"This is a working draft," he said. "Nothing has been decided. No votes have been taken and numbers can change in a flash."

Malvey said that apart from contracted salary increases the budget is level-funded. Therefore, anticipated special education increases account for the projected deficit and the budget was presented that way to illustrate the point.

He stressed that there are no plans to mitigate any services to special needs students.

"We will meet that obligation, no matter how it is funded," he said.

Jerz, who said special education students deserve better from those elected to represent them, said she is opposed to the budget plan because it could pit special needs against regular education.

"Asking for $300,000 in general operating costs is fine with me," she said. "But I object to you standing up and asking for additional funds for special education."

Malvey said the school department would not shirk its responsibility to pay for special education but the public has a right to know what is driving the budget.

The school department budget for special education in FY00, which ends June 30, was $764,330 not counting a $200,000 unanticipated shortfall made up at last month's special town meeting for a total of $964,330. The school department is presenting a FY01 "level-funded" SPED budget of $768,450 — but with "additional required budget needs" of $297,593 for a likely total of about $1.07 million — a jump of about 9 percent.

Haddad said Tuesday that he recommends putting off funding the anticipated deficit until the fall because the town could see an increase in state aid. He said it's also not clear if the town will need more or less special education services depending on what happens over the summer with families moving in and out of town.

"There are so many unknowns," he said. "It doesn't make sense to try to go for an override now."

Like Malvey, Haddad said special education is not under fire.

"I picked special education to show where the major increase in the school budget is," he said. "It could have just as easily have been utility costs (if they had soared)."

Haddad said he and selectmen are working closely with the school committee on its budget.

"We're working together, it's a cooperative effort," he said.

Office building may replace 3A eyesore

King St. 'triangle' currently home to excavation materials

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The excavation materials and mounds of dirt which sit on the triangular-shaped island at the intersection of King St. and Route 3A may be replaced by a colonial-style office building.

"Anything will look better than what's there now," laughed Neil Murphy, consulting engineer for Joseph A. Rosano, who owns the property and leases it to excavating engineer Arthur Pompeo.

Building commissioner Bob Egan said the property has a long history.

"The town went to court in the early 1990's regarding that piece of property, which is zoned residential but has preexisting, nonconforming uses," Egan said. "The town lost and those nonconforming uses remained. About six years ago, a small medical building was permitted there, but it never was built."

Egan sent a letter to Rosano last November urging cleanup of the site, which he wrote "has never been so overloaded with material, debris, and vehicles."

The site has since been cleaned up to Egan's satisfaction, but the vehicles and piles of dirt remain. Rosano said there hasn't been much else he could do with the property until he undertook plans for the office building.

"It has nonconforming business uses, and so I've leased it out for truck storage and equipment," he said. "With all the construction on King Street, the piles of dirt just kind of grew. But that's calmed down now."

Rosano, who also owns Strawberry Parfait in the village, said Murphy has "just about completed the plans" for the office building, described as an exact duplicate of an antique colonial house.

"It's going to be a wood-framed building with a colonial look to it," Murphy said.

Rosano will have to go through the permitting process with the planned office building. He said he is eager to begin filling out forms and appearing before town boards.

"I'm hoping to get the permitting underway by the end of January or the beginning of February," he said.

The mound of dirt and stone at the King Street triangle could be history if plans for a new office building at the site meet with town approval.

Rep. Murray to step down at end of term of the family and helped with this particular issue and they would support her if she decided to run again," he said.

Holden said anyone would be hard pressed to find a legislator who was more responsive whether at the town or personal level.

"You didn't make a phone call that wasn't answered or returned," he said. "And that goes a long way toward giving people a feeling that someone has got them in mind."

Bradley said although he and Murray differed on their approach to the issues, he has nothing but respect for her as a person and legislator.

"She is a wonderful person who has done a tremendous job for the district over the years and I thank her for that," said Bradley, who recalled meeting Murray for the first time during a field trip to the Statehouse when as a fifth-grader at Hingham's Plymouth River School.

"If elected, I hope to continue her tradition of strong constituent service," he said.

Polly Logan of Cohasset, who is the vice-chairman of the state Republican Party, said the citizens of the district were lucky to have someone like Murray represent them for so long.

"Hingham, Hull and Cohasset were so fortunate to have Mary Jeanette who gave such caring service over the years," Logan said.

Deputy Secretary of Administration and Finance Peter Forman, who served as a state representative for 14 years — four of those as house minority leader — praised Murray's "dogged advocacy for her constituents."

"I remember her favorite line, 'My people want me to vote this way,'" Forman recalled.

"She is an old style representative who never sought higher office and just wanted to represent the people of the towns that elected her whether that was voting their way on a bill or relentless advocacy for a single constituent," he said.

Murray, who wants to spend more time with her grandchildren, said she has not ruled out running again for office and is considering seeking the open selectmen's seat in Cohasset. Murray served three terms as a selectman in the 1970s.

She said the decision to step aside at the end of this term at the Statehouse was a difficult one.

"I've never had so much trouble making up my mind," she said. "I love it so, I love the people."

Logan said Republicans want to keep Murray busy and thought there might be a state-level appointment for Murray sometime down the road.

"We're going to give her time to smell the roses before we utilize all her wonderful talent and experience," she said.

So far Murray, who served in the Marine Corps during World War II, has followed in her father's footsteps. Her late father Nathaniel Hurwitz of Cohasset graduated from holding town elected office to serving six terms as a state representative. He was later appointed commissioner of veterans' services. Murray expects she might be offered an appointment in veterans' services at some point.

"But I think I'd like to breakaway and doing something different," Murray said. "I'm seriously thinking about running for selectman."

PLUMBING MUSINGS
by Philip Von Iderstein M.P. #8829
FOURTH GENERATION

I am a fourth generation plumber. "We use toilet water for cologne" is our family motto. My great-grandfather began the family plumbing business before the turn of the twentieth century, working out of a horse-drawn wagon. He fixed windmills and the associated piping, before there was any municipal water supply.

We haven't expanded our horizons much from the times when flushing the toilet was the new technology, but the plumbing trade has provided a decent living for four generations. It seems like everyone in the family is a plumber, was a plumber, or at least worked in the trade for a time. It is a humble trade, but we are all proud of our work.

Great-grandfather was known as Tinker Bailey, because he could fix anything. The story goes...

Thanksgiving morning, 1888, Tinker was fixing the kitchen drain for Becky Cushing. She said, "I heard one of the Bailey Boys is getting married this morning." He replied, "Yes miss, me." "You! My heavens what a preparation!" Old Aunt Sally said that when people heard that story, every one started calling Fred for their plumbing needs, and it was the beginning of the plumbing company.

I grew up with a sense of belonging in my family, my church, my town, and in the business. I don't think many people have that sense of place today.

Selectmen endorse finance director

Town accountant would assume position

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Like an elephant, Town Manager Mark Haddad never forgets.

So when selectmen did not fully endorse his proposal to create a Director of Finance position in discussions before last month's special town meeting, it was safe to assume selectmen would see the proposal again.

Just as Haddad eventually succeeded in convincing selectmen of the need for paramedic care in Cohasset, he gained the board's unanimous recommendation for a finance director at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, though selectmen Fred Koed was absent.

After the previous debate on the finance director position, Koed voted along with fellow selectmen Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris against recommending an article on the special town meeting warrant.

At that point, a visibly angered Haddad removed the article from the special town meeting warrant, not wishing to bring it before the town without support from selectmen.

Haddad's proposal during the last budgetary cycle was to consolidate the town's three financial departments under one person, Buckley, who would then report to Haddad.

Haddad said a senior-level financial officer would help ensure accountability in the financial department. Currently, that department is made up of three individual departments: the treasurer/collector's department, the assessors' department, and the town accountant's department. The heads of those three departments now report to Haddad individually.

> "I'm very satisfied that these proposed articles meet the concerns I had about a Director of Finance."
> — Selectman Ronnie McMorris

A finance director would be in charge of all three departments, allowing for flexibility to deal with turnover or the extended absence of an employee as well as allowing for shared resources. Haddad said the benefits of a finance director go beyond simply enhanced accountability within the finance department.

"During the course of our annual town audit, the auditor suggested that we evaluate the cost/benefit of appointing a senior-level financial officer," he told selectmen before the December special town meeting. "Right now, we rely too heavily on banks to do our reconciliation. Also, no one person has responsibility over our debt process. The director of finance would be responsible for those and we'll be better off. We might even be able to improve our already strong bond rating."

To soothe selectmen's concerns about the position this time around, Haddad drafted two articles for the spring town meeting.

"The finance director will provide monthly financial reports to selectmen and the Town Manager, so selectmen are aware of the town's financial situation," Haddad said. "In addition, department heads, such as the finance director, will have the right of appeal to the Board of Selectmen when terminated by the Town Manager."

The two finance director warrant articles were designed to ease the worries of some selectmen, particularly McMorris, that a finance director position would centralize too much authority under the Town Manager.

"I'm very satisfied that these proposed articles meet the concerns I had about a Director of Finance," McMorris said at the Jan. 4 selectmen's meeting.

Under Haddad's plan, Town Accountant Michael Buckley would add the duties of finance director to his current responsibilities and would receive a $7,120 raise to an annual salary of $70,000.

Haddad said the actual impact of Buckley's promotion on the town operating budget will only be $4,000, since Buckley is slated to receive a five percent raise regardless of the promotion.

In voting against the proposal prior to the special town meeting, Brown said any expenditure for the proposal seemed unnecessary. In discussing the measure on Tuesday, he still found a five percent raise extreme, but said he had no problem raising Buckley's salary to the $70,000 proposed by Haddad.

"I don't think we should be going more than three and a half percent on any of these raises," Brown said. "That's what union contracts are. That being said, I agree with the $70,000 for Michael [Buckley]. I think he's worth it."

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who voted along with selectman Tom Callahan in support of the finance director position last November, said she has no reservations regarding Buckley's salary increase.

"I think five percent is an appropriate raise at the executive level, especially for Michael," she said.

After selectmen voted to endorse the finance director proposal, Haddad breathed a long-awaited sigh of relief. With a recommendation for paramedics at the special town meeting and Tuesday's recommendation for the director of Finance, his vision for the town is taking shape."

AROUND TOWN

AWESOME FIREWORKS

It is a brand new year and were we in Cohasset ever lucky — thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Peter Roy there was the fireworks display that was awesome (that's the only word for them) and brought us into the year 2000 in grand style! Anyone who was there can tell you that they were a beautiful sight; both old and young were enthralled!

Our thanks go to the Roy family as well as good wishes for the New Year!

MS BENEFIT WALK

Woody Chittick sent me a note last week, he is on the Central New England Chapter's Board of the Multiple Sclerosis Society and is involved in Cohasset's role in the annual (April) fund-raising walk that is of special interest to him.

They would love to get more people to participate, and here is how you can start the process — on Saturday, Jan. 15, volunteers will meet at 10 a.m. at the Lightkeeper's Inn, Bancroft Hall on Border Street. Coffee and danish will be provided during a brief training session. After the training session, volunteers will be divided into groups and given specific areas of town to go into businesses and ask to display MS Walk brochures — following the distribution of brochures, a light lunch will be provided at the Lightkeeper's Inn.

Be a volunteer (as Woody said, there are five or so sufferers in Cohasset). For more information, call Brenda Barbour, director of volunteers, at 800-493-9255, Ext. 135.

COLLEGE SCHOLARS

News from Connecticut College — freshman Stephen Mark Reynolds has been admitted as a Lawrence Scholar. This achievement is granted to only a few students per year

Lawrence Scholars are selected on the basis of outstanding achievement in the arts, sciences and humanities during secondary school. In recognition of their past accomplishments and potential for leadership in college and beyond, Lawrence Scholars are granted a fellowship to enable an internship during the summer months between junior and senior years!

Stephen is a graduate of Cohasset High School and we are proud of that and him!

EARLY DECISION

Jessie L. Zerendow has been offered admission to Colby College in Maine under Colby's early decision program. She is scheduled to enroll in the fall following her graduation from Cohasset Junior-Senior High School.

Jessie is the daughter of Donald and Victoria Zerendow. At CHS she is vice president of the Student Council and the National Honor Society. She is also captain of the soccer and tennis teams — Jessie is one of 129 students admitted for early-decision admission to Colby!

Congratulations!!

FOND FAREWELL TO OUR 'SANTA'

It was a sad day in Cohasset Dec. 31, the day we lost our very own Santa Claus! Henry Brennock played the role of Santa for more than 50 years! He was also head custodian at the Joseph Osgood School until he retired in 1984, a carpenter and built houses. He was a communicant of St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset and a Navy Veteran of World War II.

As you can see, we have lost a special man and you had better believe he will be missed — our love to Henry's family and a fond farewell to "Santa."

TEEN GARAGE OPENS!

We hope that you noticed, the Teen Garage Center is open! Located right behind the Red Lion Inn, it should be a "haven" for our teens — nice that they have a spot to go to (at last)! Stop in and check it out, the Youth Resources Committee is very proud of it (and of all who helped make it possible)

BIRTHDAY WISHES

Here are some people whom you can wish a very happy birthday to this month — Tom Cowan, Mary Goodwin, Ruth Pratt, Carol Dieffenbach, Isabel Kelley and Connie Tolman. Hopefully we will hear news of their day and what event took place!

SNOWFALL

A snow-maker tries to add some winter ambiance to the Roy Estate on Margin Street in preparation for the family's New Year's Eve festivities that included a spectacular fireworks display over Cohasset Harbor.

CANCER DRIVERS SOUGHT

A reminder that you may be able to do a wonderful thing — become a driver for those who need cancer treatments and cannot get there on their own! Patients get weak, tired and sick from their treatments and your driving is important to them (and their recovery). For more information, call the American Cancer Society at 508-584-9600.

RUN FOR ELECTION

Don't forget that you can now get nomination papers for the Annual Town Election (April 8) at the Town Hall. The positions open are Selectman, School Committee, Trustees for the Paul Pratt Library, Assessors, Board of Health, Cohasset Housing Authority, Planning Board, Recreation Committee, Sewer Commissioner, Water Commissioner — there is a job for every person who will help keep Cohasset "afloat," so just make your choice; take out your papers and do your best to make our town even better!

That's it for this week! Just a plea to make sure that you call me with your latest event!

Teen Garage holds grand opening

Dance, open house highlight festivities

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

For the teens and adults who have worked so hard to make the Teen Garage a reality, last Saturday could not have come soon enough.

While the opening of the Garage that afternoon marked the culmination of their effort, it also marks a beginning of sorts, as Cohasset kids finally have a place to call their own.

To celebrate the occasion, an open house was held for all residents from 4 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. and a dance for grades 6-9 was held from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Recreation director Jack Worley termed both events an unqualified success.

"The opening went extremely well," he said. "We had a great turnout for the open house and we had 65 kids here for the dance. It was great."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris praised the efforts of all who worked to ensure that the Teen Garage came to fruition.

"The Garage came out so well," she said. "It's a great space where kids will be able to spend time without parental supervision. There was a terrific turnout for the dance. A lot of credit should go to the people who worked very hard on it."

Upon an initial glance, the Garage appears to have everything teens would want in a place to hang out with friends. Four 27-inch televisions sit at different locations, three of which are connected to video game systems like Sony PlayStation and Nintendo 64.

"The video games are the only thing we bought in the whole place," Worley said. "Even the televisions were donated."

The fourth television is equipped with cable and sits above the custom-made, finished, wooden snack bar, made by one of the inmates who worked on the Garage as part of a program of the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office.

Tables with tops fashioned from street signs sit in front of the snack bar area, which includes a refrigerator and microwave.

Some snacks will need to be prepared for the Super Bowl party which Worley plans to hold at the Garage.

"We've got a projection TV which we're going to set up by the Super Bowl," he said. "You need to have a big TV for that game."

Should kids get tired of PlayStation or Nintendo games, or, more likely, if there is a wait to play, two arcade-style video games have been donated to the Garage as well.

Next to the arcade games is a stage where DJs can set up for dances like the one held Saturday night. Worley said the location of the stage enabled kids to engage in other activities once they tired of dancing.

"It's a great space where kids will be able to spend time without parental supervision. A lot of credit should go to the people who worked very hard on it."

— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

"Some kids danced, some were sitting on the couches and talking and some were playing games," he said. "It was nice to have different options so they didn't get bored."

At the Dec. 6 special town meeting, $8,750 was appropriated to hire a coordinator for the center for the second half of the fiscal year, but Worley said once has yet to be hired.

"We're still looking for someone," he said. "We'd prefer a young adult with a degree, but we may end up going with a college student."

Until a coordinator is hired, the Garage will only be open on weekends. A dance for grades 9-12 had been scheduled for Friday, Jan. 21.

The program is Wednesday, Jan. 19, at 7:30 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset.

Hard times hit the HMOs

"America's health care system is completely broken," Sen. John Kerry told a group of Community Newspaper Co. editors last week, and few Harvard Pilgrim subscribers could disagree.

The state's largest health maintenance organization, Harvard Pilgrim has for years been considered one of the nation's best. Compared to other HMOs, it has delivered quality service and customer satisfaction at a reasonable price.

Unfortunately, being good hasn't balanced the books, and Harvard Pilgrim's spectacular losses have now landed it in state receivership to protect it from its creditors.

The problem, Kerry says, is that we have two health care systems in this country. We have a form of socialized medicine for millions of people who depend on the federal government for their coverage: Medicare and Medicaid recipients, veterans and federal employees. We have a for-profit system for those who must - and can afford to - buy their own health insurance.

The government's health care system is squeezed by medical inflation and by efforts to cut the budget deficit. The government has tried to control its costs by squeezing the balloon at one end, not only undermining the finances of hospitals and home health agencies, but raising costs for private insurers, which end up covering the expenses of Medicare patients whose bills go over the federal caps.

The private side not only has to make up for Medicare cuts, it must pay more for prescription drugs and other rising medical costs. HMOs must also cover the expense of playing in the big-bucks health care game. Harvard Pilgrim traces much of its current red ink to the costs of rapid growth during the merge-or-die consolidation that has rocked the industry over the last 15 years. Competing against other HMOs for subscribers has also led Harvard Pilgrim to make price and service promises it can't afford to keep.

In dealing with Harvard Pilgrim's immediate crisis, none of the options are attractive. Letting the HMOs walk away from its debts could easily force some hospitals into bankruptcy. Greater state regulation of HMOs may be needed, but it appears as likely to make the problems worse - if politicians push for lower premiums and more services, when the opposite may be needed - rather than solving the problem.

Harvard Pilgrim has now, unfortunately, grown too big for the state to allow it to fail, so some bailout may be required. But it won't be the answer, and it won't be the last. It now appears that Harvard Pilgrim's chief competitor, Tufts Health Plan, has its own financial troubles.

The problem is systemic, and the political structure has been paralyzed. The Clinton Administration's attempt at comprehensive health care reform in 1993 failed because of Democrats' ineptness, Republicans' obstructionism and the power of special interests in the health care industry. Since then, the Democrats have been content to push incremental improvements and Republicans have been content to pretend the private sector will fix what the government can't.

Neither approach is working. In a sparkling economy, the number of uninsured Americans is growing at an alarming pace. Patients, physicians, hospitals and insurers are all dissatisfied with the system, and things are getting worse.

In New Hampshire and across the country, Democrats Al Gore and Bill Bradley are debating health care. Gore is still pushing incrementalism, while Bradley promotes comprehensive reform. The specifics on both sides may be shaky, but the debate is vitally important. The nation's health care system is sick and getting sicker. It's time we stopped letting the ghost of Hillary Clinton's failure scare us into using band-aids when major surgery is overdue.

A season of giving

With the hustle and bustle of the holiday season behind us, it's back to a normal routine for most of us. While the holidays are quickly becoming a fading memory, we didn't want too much time to pass before acknowledging the many Mariner newspaper readers who so generously supported our Gifts of Hope campaign.

During a time in which many hands were seeking donations for many worthy causes, you came through in support of our effort to raise money for, and awareness of, a growing problem on the South Shore – homelessness.

In our inaugural campaign, we feel we certainly accomplished that goal.

As the checks came pouring in during the months of November and December for South Shore Friends of the Homeless, Carolina Hill and Father Bill's Place, we were touched by the stories of the people who were willing to share their troubles as well as those who were willing to donate to the causes.

While donations came from many sources and from all walks of life, there were a couple of instances that reminded us of the true magic of giving during the holiday season. One couple who recently lost their baby shortly after birth donated $100 to one of the charities to help brighten the holidays for another child. To think of others during a truly sad and tragic time was inspiring and uplifting. The children who pooled their piggy bank collection to donate $10 to each of the homeless shelters also inspired us. And then there were those who had been homeless or who were on the verge, contributing to the cause.

While many of us are getting back to our regular routines, it's important for us not to forget the problem of homelessness and more importantly, the people who find themselves in that plight. It seems every holiday season, efforts to raise money are turned up several notches. But the problems of homelessness and hunger don't go away once the decorations are taken off the Christmas tree.

While some of us can expect to be dealing with inflated credit card bills in the months following the holidays, the people who find themselves homeless continue their struggle year round.

Jenkins first to declare selectman candidacy

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The first hat has been thrown in the ring for Diane Sullivan's open selectmen's seat.

Last week, Sullivan announced she would not run for reelection, owing to a lack of available market-priced condominiums for senior citizens.

"I would have run for reelection, but I can't commit to three more years when I don't know if I'll be in this town," she said.

Sullivan's announcement ensures a new face will be seen behind the selectmen's desk after the April annual town election.

Leland Jenkins, who is a candidate for selectman, speaks to voters on a warrant article at last month's special town meeting.

Leland Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, was the first candidate to declare his intention to run for Sullivan's open seat, obtaining nomination papers from the Town's Clerk office on Wednesday.

A two-term member of the advisory committee and a former member of the Holbrook planning board, Jenkins said his civic experience could serve the town well.

"I think I have something positive to offer this town as a selectman," Jenkins said Wednesday afternoon. "From my time on the advisory committee, I have a working knowledge of town budgets and the ability to ask the pertinent questions when necessary."

Jenkins said he worries that increasing property taxes will cause Cohasset to undergo social stratification and lose all vestiges of diversity.

"I don't want to sacrifice the people who have lived here for years," he said. "We need to retain diversity, or we'll become a town where of only wealthy, young families."

Only two other citizens have obtained nomination papers thus far to run for public office. Library Trustee Agnes McCann and water commissioner John McNabb are both seeking reelection.

The last day to obtain nomination papers is Thursday, Feb.17.

I think I have something positive to offer this town as a selectman. From my time on the advisory committee, I have a working knowledge of town budgets and the ability to ask the pertinent questions when necessary."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Proposed school budget

TO: COHASSET SCHOOL COMMITTEE:

We are writing to you at this time to express our dismay at your approach to both the budget and the budgeting process for fiscal year 2000/2001. According to an article in the Dec. 23 issue of the Cohasset Mariner, the School Committee has decided (without holding any public discussion), to put approximately ($300,000) of its budget, attributable to special education, "on hold" until the fall town meeting. We believe that this approach to budgeting is foolhardy in that it jeopardizes not just special education students, but all students in the Cohasset school system, for several reasons.

First, despite the best intentions of all involved, there is absolutely no guarantee that there will be enough free cash available in the fall to cover these costs, and even if there is, there is no guarantee that town meeting will vote favorably on an article to cover these costs. If you will recall, a similar article at last fall's town meeting in December passed, but a surprisingly large number of people voted against it. If, come October, funds are not available to cover mandated special education costs, these costs will still have to be paid. That means that you will be in the position, in October, with school already is session, of cutting either staff or programs, cuts that will negatively impact all students, and will further exacerbate already existing special ed/regular ed tensions.

Secondly, it is the School Committee's responsibility, not the Town Manager's, to set policy and review and approve budgets for the district. We have not heard from our School Councils, whose input into the budgeting process is required under Ed Reform. We have yet to hear from our administrators, in particular our Special Education Director, as to the needs for that department. This is not a "special education deficit," as has been reported in the media, but an actual cost increase that will deliberately not be budgeted for, a budgeting methodology that we find perplexing at best.

Lastly, Massachusetts General Law requires the School Committee to present a bottom line budget to be voted on by the city or town and says that the town appropriating body "shall not allocate appropriations among accounts." Although it is certainly within the law for the School Committee to allocate within its budget, we believe that using special education costs as a political football speaks very badly for the Cohasset School Committee. If the Cohasset School Committee chooses to level fund its budget and go back to the town in the fall to cover any shortfalls, (a strategy that we would not endorse) we would suggest that the School Committee, at that time, ask for funds to cover general operating expenses. Alternately, the School Committee might consider putting their well defined budget needs before the voters of the town, and trusting those voters to vote in the best interests of all of Cohasset's students, as opposed to playing political games with special education costs.

As parents who advocate for the needs of special education students, and work to destigmatize the issue of special education in the general public, we find it disheartening that our School Committee would choose to separate special education costs from the general school budget and then fail to budget for them. The children of this town who receive special education services, and their families, deserve better from the political leaders elected to represent them.

Alumni game

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Cohasset Varsity Ice Hockey players and coaches and the Hockey Boosters, I would like to thank those individuals who helped Ann Rasmussen and me with the preparations for the Alumni-Varsity Hockey Game held Jan. 1.

I would like to acknowledge: Tim Straughn for the posters he made to advertise the game; Chris Straughn, Sharon Moody and Joanne Lehr for their help with all the final details at the rink on the night of the game; Rob Dennis and Archie Rasmussen for skating as referees for both games held for the Alumni; Tony Rolfe for volunteering to announce the game; Ed Straughn for volunteering to act as timekeeper; Joe Nicynski for collecting admissions at the door; and Asst. Coach Michael Hubley for his help with conceiving of and coordinating the Alumni Game and coaching the varsity bench during the games.

I would also like to thank: John and Shelanne Durkin and Michael and Rosemary O'Connell for donating Bruins tickets for the raffle held during the game; and the anonymous alumnus who generously offered to pay the registration fee for all alumni players who are currently college students.

Special thanks go to Ann Rasmussen for all her hard work over the months prior to the game. Without her assistance, planning and efforts, I don't think there would have been an alumni game!

Last, but not least, we extend our sincere thanks to: the alumni who showed their support of Cohasset Varsity Hockey not only through their enthusiastic attendance at the Alumni Game, but also through their overwhelming donations; and to Varsity Hockey Coach Dennis Walsh ... the man whom all the alumni players came to see and shake hands with!

POLICE AND FIREFIGHTER DEATH BENEFITS(H 4951) House 149-0, Senate 38-0, approved and sent to Governor Cellucci a $900,000 bill providing a one-time $100,000 death benefit to the families of nine public safety officers including the firefighters who lost their lives in the Worcester blaze several weeks ago. The law allowing the $100,000 benefit was approved several years ago but the benefits must be approved by the legislature before they are awarded. Supporters said the state should do whatever it can to help out the families of these heroes and noted the $100,000 for each family will help in some small way. They noted the benefits will go not only to the families of the firefighters in Worcester and Revere but to the families of police officers in Holyoke and Wareham. (A "Yea" vote is for the benefits).

Bradley announces candidacy for state representative

Former Plymouth County Assistant District Attorney Garrett Bradley officially announced his candidacy for State Representative in the third Plymouth District. Bradley won the Democratic Primary for this seat in 1998 and went on to lose a close election to the incumbent, Republican Mary Jeanette Murray.

"I am running for State Representative to make state government more responsive to the communities of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset," Bradley said. "During the next few years, the state legislature will make important decisions that will directly affect the quality and safety of our schools, the availability of affordable health care, and the impact of taxes on seniors and working families. I want to ensure that we have a strong, effective voice that will stand up for the people of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset on these important issues."

As the father of a seven-month old baby girl and a product of Hingham schools and Boston College High School, Bradley has a stake in making sure that our local schools continue to provide a quality education and a safe environment for learning.

"With the first part of the Education Reform legislation ending, it is critical that our district have a representative who will fight to provide our schools with increased state funding, high standards and greater accountability," Bradley said. "The decisions made by the state legislature during the next few years will have a great impact on our children's education and their future. We must make sure the state maintains its commitment to our children."

Garrett Bradley

Another issue high on Bradley's priority list is access to affordable health care and prescription drugs, especially for senior citizens.

"The state legislature made a positive start this year by increasing funding for prescription drugs for seniors. However, we still have a long way to go to ensure that senior citizens have access to affordable health care services," Bradley said. "In addition, we must work with state and federal officials to increase access to affordable health care plans for all citizens."

As a homeowner in Hingham, Bradley also understands the burden that property taxes place on many working families and senior citizens. He is advocating using the windfall gained from the tobacco settlement to pay for some of the many unfunded state mandates.

Bradley brings community and professional experience to his campaign for State Representative. As an Assistant District Attorney in Plymouth County, Bradley prosecuted hundreds of cases. His hard work paid off, earning him the position as lead prosecutor in the Narcotics Division of Brockton District Court and as lead prosecutor of the Hingham District Court in charge of all domestic violence cases. He left the District Attorney's office in 1998 to pursue a career in the private sector, and is currently an associate at the law firm of Thornton and Naumes.

In addition to this professional experience, Bradley is involved in his community. He has volunteered over the years as a football coach on the Hingham Playground Committee, at the Wellspring Multiservice Center in Hull, the Children's Champion Network, and as a member of the Hingham Capital Outlay Committee. In addition, he has served on the Hingham Democratic Town Committee and the Plymouth County Democratic League. Bradley attended Hingham Public Schools, Boston College High School, Boston College, and Boston College Law School.

McKenna announces candidacy for Murray's seat

Mary Anne McKenna, a resident of Hingham and an active Republican, said she will seek the seat of Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset. Murray, a 24-year representative of the South Shore, recently announced that she will not seek reelection.

"Our district has been well served by Mary Jeanette Murray. It is my intention to continue that tradition, in particular, her devotion to constituent services," said McKenna, 35, a clinical research consultant and single mother. "I am humbled by the interest that many residents in these communities have expressed, encouraging me to step forward and run for this seat. There is strong support in this district to maintain political balance on Beacon Hill."

McKenna said that she is working with area party leaders to establish a campaign committee and to shape her position on key issues concerning the residents of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset.

Mary Anne McKenna

"The timing is right for me," McKenna said. "As we've crossed the threshold of the millennium, it seems only fitting that a new and vigorous voice represent the interests of our district. I hope that as people get to know me, they will find that this campaign is not about me, but about them and their issues, and the fact that there are many great things about this district that deserve a compassionate, trusting voice at the Statehouse. Whether residents are Republican, Democrat or Unenrolled, it is my intent to reach out to all, and I believe that I can serve all the residents with equal passion," she said.

McKenna said that she intends to formally announce her candidacy at a campaign kick-off/fundraiser to be held in February.

A graduate of Hingham High School and University of Massachusetts at Boston, McKenna holds a master's degree in education and counseling. McKenna is employed in the field of pharmaceutical research. A newcomer to public office, McKenna has worked on several area campaigns, including those of Murray and state Sen. Robert Hedlund.

Giving and receiving at the RTF

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It is a privilege to reflect upon holiday stimuli as they affect this column. Giving and receiving are what a transfer station is all about, after all. And following our RTF acronym Cohasset Agrees to Recycle Everything, I believe everything IS recyclable. Maybe even souls.

Let's start with yesterday, which happened to be the day of Henry Brennock's funeral, he of the '1-4-3 Cohasset' plate on the front of his car. The line of Henry's I will always remember, and hand on to people whenever I can, is his quick reply when told, in passing, "What a nice day, Henry." "Every day's a nice day," he would say.

So when I got over to the RTF afterwards, the place was hopping with townspeople anxious to lighten their homes of Christmas debris on this first really nice day since the holidays. Not everyone understood why only Paul, our assistant, was having to rush around doing everything, their not knowing manager Dickie lives directly across from the Brennocks. So I was pressed into service, so to speak, and Paul taught me how I could help him with the cardboard compactor. It's an impressive piece of machinery. Another gift I received was being able to assist a lady with a flat tire at the RTF, making me feel good. In the process I was heartened to receive the happy loan of the proper tools from my buddies at Robbins Garage. Those guys are some of my most favorite people. They give 100 percent all the time.

But we're not through with the RTF yet. I was privileged to meet an inspiring townsperson who despite the Christmas debris was super conscientious about its separation into the proper bins for recycling. It's always so refreshing to meet someone who sees such projects as yet another enhancement of life's smorgasbord. So I was not greatly surprised but greatly encouraged to see the driver's bumper sticker "THE EARTH DOES NOT BELONG TO US. WE BELONG TO THE EARTH."

As Dan Brennock said in his beautiful eulogy of his Dad, "Kings and queens could only wish to own what my dad gave away — rich unconditional love to all of us."

We're all recycled — and recyclable — transfer facilities. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Artist of the Month

Oil paintings by artist Michael Moss of Quincy are currently featured at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library from Jan. 6 through Feb. 29. An opening reception for the artist's show was held at the library Sunday, Jan. 9, from 5-7 p.m.

Moss received his B.F.A. at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond and his M.A. at Boston University Graduate School of Arts. He currently studies with John Kilroy in figure and still life painting at the North River Arts Society in Marshfield; T.M Nicholas in landscape painting in various locations, and with Tom Nicholas, mentor in drawing and painting, in Rockport.

Moss has participated in numerous juried shows including the 1999 North River Festival of Arts in Marshfield and the 1999 Boston Art Festival art exhibit and sale. Moss has become a recent member of the South Shore Art Center with group shows at the Art Center and a 1999 summer Work Show at the James Library Gallery in Norwell and the winter Members Show at the North River Arts Society of Marshfield.

"Everything I paint — from figure to still lives to landscapes — is painted from life. For it to be successful, my painting must make you feel how I felt to be there. Not just the place, or even the time of day, but my subjective, emotional response to being alert, living and recording — in real time."

There are numerous paintings full of local seaside color and vitality. Moss utilizes a balance of color and shape that captivates the eye. Come in and experience the oil paintings of Michael Moss first hand.

A nickname in Deerfield

The moment of truth has arrived at Frontier Regional High School in Deerfield. The school committee, representing the towns of Conway, Sunderland and Whately as well as Deerfield, was scheduled last night (Tuesday) to meet formally to choose a new nickname for the school's athletic teams.

The last one, "the Redskins," which had been used for all the 44 years of the school's existence, was ruled out two years ago as offensive to Native Americans, or Indians, as they were known in the days before words were chosen carefully for their political correctness.

For those of you who think this is not a serious matter, let it be known that already the controversy has cost the school committee chairman his job. Karl Koenigsbauer resigned because he didn't think the committee was paying enough attention to education.

The issue was such a hot potato two years ago that all those concerned agreed to drop the matter for at least a year so that cooler heads might prevail.

The issue was such a hot potato two years ago that all those concerned agreed to drop the matter for at least a year so that cooler heads might prevail. They were to find out last night if they did.

The school committee was slated to pick the new nickname from a list of four suggestions coming out of a poll of the students themselves: Trailblazers, Redhawks, Redwings, or Chiefs.

There may be some trouble with the last one since UMass-Lowell a few years ago was forced to change the nickname of its hockey team from Chiefs to Riverhawks and trash the Indian head on their sweaters.

And Dartmouth College has long since dropped the nickname "Indians" in favor of "the Big Green," despite the fact that the college was founded as an Indian school.

(Wait until the little green men who landed in Roswell, N. M. find out about that one.)

According to the American Indian Movement of Minneapolis, which was to have an observer at last night's meeting, there are 32 schools in Massachusetts with politically incorrect mascots involving Indians or Indian names.

Hanover is one of them with their Indians. Braintree is another with the Wamps, named for Josiah Wampatuck, the Indian . . . oops, the Native American chief who sold Quincy, Braintree, Randolph and Holbrook to the white folks for 21 pounds, 12 shillings.

The Red Raiders of North Quincy High are already circling the wagons against an Indian attack on its mascot, a Red Raider called "Yakoo," after a former Armenian student named "Yacubian" who is shown in his native Armenian costume - a breechclout, a headband of feathers, and a tomahawk.

How about the high school in Frisco, Texas, that calls its athletic teams "the Coons" because a student once offered the school his pet raccoon for a mascot?

Or Point Pleasant, W.Va., High School, which was known as "the Big Blacks" since the 1920s because its football team wore black uniforms at the time?

Folks from Campton, Calif., High School were called "the Tarbabies" because Compton Junior College in the same town was known as "the Tartars" so the high school kids became "the Tar(tar)babies."

A few years ago, Wahpeton High School in North Dakota changed its nickname to "the Huskies," and the pressure came not from Native Americans, or Indians, or Redskins but from Americans of Southern European descent.

For years, the high schoolers had called themselves "the Wops."

Printing site changes at Mariner

Community Newspaper Company, parent group of the Mariner, announced this week a restructuring plan which includes transferring the printing of 25 newspapers from its Marshfield production plant to more modern facilities in Auburn and Framingham.

The editorial, sales and marketing and composing functions of the operation for the Mariner newspapers will continue at the Mariner's headquarters on Enterprise Drive. The Marshfield printing operation has reached its capacity and new uses in technology and redesigned work processes allows for more efficiencies.

A total of 30 positions in the print area have been impacted by the change. At the same time, 20 will be added to the Auburn plant and all Marshfield based employees can apply for those positions.

Company president Kirk Davis said all affected employees will receive separation pay and outplacement benefits. They are also able to apply for open positions within CNC for which they are eligible.

"CNC has taken care to minimize the number of positions eliminated in this restructuring," Davis stated. "These actions are being taken to strengthen our organization overall to help us achieve our growth objectives. These changes will allow us to more effectively serve the communities in which we operate, while continuing to maintain the individual, local identities of the newspapers we publish."

Deadline for community copy

The deadline for submitting community copy for the Cohasset Mariner is 8 a.m., Friday for the following week's issue. Letters and obituaries will be accepted until noon, Tuesday. Items may be dropped off at Cohasset News, 3 Brook St. or sent by fax to 741-2931. Call Mary Ford at 741-2933 with questions.

Gymnastics chases Pilgrim Conference 2 title

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Nobody likes to see a gymnast go down with a painful injury. But injuries may just make the difference for the Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team this season.

So far, injuries to opposing gymnasts have played roles in two huge wins for C/N and have put Ruthann Ardizzoni's team in prime position within the Pilgrim Conference 2.

First, there was Scituate High's wonderful Gina Verge, who strained through a back injury in C/N's upset victory. Last week, C/N went up against a deep Hanover High team, minus the Indians' top gymnast, Shannon Gerrish. The Hanover star was on the sidelines with a badly sprained ankle.

With Gerrish looking on, the one-two combination of co-captains Kristin Sheerin and Carlie Carter paced C/N to its third win of the season with a 118.9 - 117.9 victory last Wednesday night at Cohasset.

The meet was also a stepping stone for several C/N gymnasts who continued their steady competition, particularly on the vault. Katie Portanova, Laura Good, Kathryn Coyne and Ami Marie all had scores in the sevens.

Good also set a personal best on the floor with her 7.0 and Meredith Bixby, who started the season with scores in the sixes, nailed a 7.7 score on her floor routine. Team captain Patti LaCroix of Norwell also had a strong meet with a personal-best score of 6.7 on the beam.

"We were very pleased," said Ardizzoni, "especially because [in] the meet we had against Scituate, we were a little overscored."

Sheerin and Carter, though, put Hanover in a 1-1/2-point hole through the halfway point of the meet. Sheerin swept first place, including a solid 34.0 in the all-around event. Sheerin also took the bars (8.3), beam (8.6), vault (8.4) and floor (8.7). Carter's second-place finishes came on the bars (8.0), beam (7.7), floor (8.1) and all-around (31.4).

"The two of them have been very consistent and improved a lot," said Ardizzoni.

The win was a big one in the overall standings of the Pilgrim Conference 2. C/N's next meet comes on Thursday with a huge rematch against Randolph High.

The Blue Devils defeated C/N in one of the team's sloppier meets with several falls off the beam that did in Ardizzoni's team. Ardizzoni believes C/N will need some help from a consistent Randolph team, which has been putting up overall scores in the 120s.

"They probably have a little more depth than us," said Ardizzoni. "We're going to need them to have a problem because they are very deep.

"Randolph would be the pick to win [the league] because they have been scoring in the 120s. But anything can happen."

Looking ahead, C/N has a strong chance in sweeping next week's three mid-week meets against Notre Dame of Hingham, Carver and Hingham. The Harbormen should be the toughest foe for C/N depending on what team shows up.

Hingham has proven to be "very erratic" so far this season with scores ranging from 114 to 120. C/N will be aiming for a solid 119 score, as it has all winter. The strategy has worked like a charm for C/N so far. There's no reason for the girls to change their approach now.

Better times ahead for skaters

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

At 1-4-1, the young Cohasset High hockey team is going through growing pains, but better times are on the way.

Cohasset and Hull faced off against each other last weekend with Hull coming out on top, 3-0.

According to coach Dennis Walsh, the Cohasset team played one of their best games of the season.

"The team is very young," said Walsh. "The team is made up mainly of freshmen and sophomores.

"In fact, one of our lines is made up entirely of freshmen, while a second line has two freshmen and one sophomore on it."

The players on the primary line are freshmen Gregg O'Connell and Matt Davis and sophomore Chris Caron.

"The kids are trying awfully hard. They practice relentlessly. It's only a matter of time before the hard work and the shots begin to pay off..."
COHASSET HIGH HOCKEY COACH DENNIS WALSH

Last year, Caron was the starting goalie on the team, a position he volunteered to play until a goalie could be found.

Such a person turned up in Steve Mikinen, who according to the coach, "has been doing a good job for the team.

"We're getting the shots, but they're just not going in. The kids are trying awfully hard. They practice relentlessly. It's only a matter of time before the hard work and the shots begin to pay off."

Cohasset's lone victory twas against Randolph. The tie came against the newly formed Abington/East Bridgewater team.

The Skippers were planning a heavy schedule of practices this week as they prepare to meet a strong Norwell team Friday at Pilgrim and follow that up with a game against Abington/East Bridgewater, Saturday.

While the team is going through growing pains now, the future looks a little brighter for the Cohasset kids.

"The numbers are beginning to pick up," said Walsh. "We have a number of seventh- and eighth-graders playing hockey in the system. We're very pleased with the way the program is going.

"We have some nice players coming along like O'Connell, Davis, Caron and Mikinen. We also have kids like Tim Straughn and Will Moody and Ken Portanova who have all been working very hard."

The coach is more than willing to work with the youngsters.

Boys hoop squad rallies for big win over Carver

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High boys basketball team continued league play last week with a tough loss to league leading Norwell, 64-47, but came back for a thrilling come from behind win over Carver.

In the Carver matchup, Cohasset was nearly left in the dust in the opening minutes by Carver's starting lineup consisting of all six footers. The score quickly was 24-8, when coach Ron Ford decided to call a timeout and talk things over with his team.

"Sometimes it takes a while to get into a rhythm," said assistant coach Mark Hall. "We just had to figure out what the other team was doing."

Because Carver had so many big men, Cohasset was pressing in the early stages of the game, trying to take advantage of Carver's lack of a ball handler.

"We were a little out of sorts, they beat our press early on and we weren't hitting our shots," said Ford, who ended up coaching the Skippers to a 67-54 victory. "But after those first couple of possessions, things really picked up. I told them to relax, and they did."

The Skippers came out of the timeout to score the game's next 16 points to tie it at 24, but they weren't done yet.

The Skippers connected on six out of eight three pointers in the first half, with tremendous contributions from everyone who went on the court.

"I was really impressed with our bench play," said Ford, as 24 of the 67 points were from non-starters. "Jake [Nohe] had that huge bucket at the end of the half, (a tip-in off a missed jumper with two seconds remaining) and [Erik] Shea played extremely well."

However, the bench was not the only source of offense for the Skippers. Junior point guard Daniel Trowers controlled the tempo of the game by pacing the Skippers with 15 points and five assists.

"Danny had, in my opinion, his best game of the year," praised Ford. "But what was even better was that we could put in [sophomore] Matt Bilodeau to give Danny a rest, and our lead increased."

Sophomore Bilodeau, along with juniors Shea and Doug O'Brien, hit a few jumpers late in the game that sealed the win. Shea's three pointer from two full steps behind the arc that Hall called "worth four points", had the entire crowd of Skipper fans cheering on their feet.

Another high point in the game occurred when Cohasset was pressing in the second half. Senior Kevin Andrews made an athletic play to intercept a pass and quickly hit fellow senior captain Craig Parker down the floor for a finger roll. Carver called a timeout, but never could recover because the lead had reached 12 points and stayed there the rest of the game.

In the Norwell contest, Cohasset played a tough first half, and briefly held a lead of three points. In the half, Andrews hit three three-pointers, and Trowers played well, but the Clippers went into the break leading by three.

"No one played poorly for us, Norwell is a good team," said Ford. "Our defense broke down a little in the second half, but we did not play poorly."

Four wrestlers place for Cohasset

Four Cohasset High athletes placed in the Whitman-Hanson Invitational last weekend.

Chris Pratt took third at 125 pounds. Sophomore Dan Littauer was third at 140, Senior Kevin Devito was second at 171, and Joe Carbone also finished second at 215.

"The kids are coming along," said coach Torin Sweeney. "We're doing the best we can."

The team finished in eighth place and was scheduled to face Rockland Wednesday night. Next up for the Skippers will be a quad meet with Sharon, New Bedford, and Duxbury on Friday at 4 p.m. On Wednesday night, they will host Hanover at 7 p.m.

On Saturday, Jan. 22, the Skippers will hold their tournament at 10 a.m.

Call firefighters funds to offset paramedic costs alarm malfunction, they still get $60," Lincoln told selectmen.

Should selectmen agree with Haddad's proposal, the call fire department could be a thing of the past when FY 2001 begins July 1.

Offering residents a paramedic service has been a goal of Haddad's since he became Town Manager in the summer of 1997. He said the benefits of a paramedic service outweigh those of the call fire department.

"When you're dealing with a budget, you have to have priorities," Haddad said. "I feel paramedic care provides better service to the residents of Cohasset than does a call fire department. It's not an easy decision, because both provide a service. But now that we've established a paramedic program, we'd like to try to do it without significantly impacting taxpayers."

Call firefighters provide additional coverage in cases of fire and are able to get to the scene quickly, according to Bellefontaine.

"Each of the town's 13 call firefighters has a pager, and we're paged immediately if there's a fire alarm at one of the larger public buildings, such as Kimball's, Sunrise, or the high school," he said. "Most of us live locally, because they need people there early rather than later."

Members of the call fire department are not permitted to drive fire trucks or to run pumps, but are outfitted with air packs and uniforms. Bellefontaine said their duties include dressing fire hydrants and laying hose.

At the Jan. 4 selectmen's meeting, Haddad said call firefighters have become obsolete with the increased staffing in the fire department and mutual aid agreements with surrounding towns.

Bellefontaine said his past experience has convinced him of the value of the call firefighters because of their ability to reach the scene of a fire before firefighters from other towns could arrive.

"It takes five or 10 minutes for the firefighters from Hull or Scituate to get here," he said. "When we had the big fire on Atlantic Avenue in Aug. 1998, I got there right away and was able to dress the hydrant. There aren't a lot of fires, but when there is a big fire, we can react immediately."

Selectman Diane Sullivan wanted to know if Lincoln feels the call fire department has outlived its usefulness.

"These guys love what they do and they believe they serve the town well," she said. "If they're not serving any purpose, that's one thing. But you haven't said that."

Lincoln said call firefighters are not able to fully assist their full-time counterparts because fire department contracts forbid them from working on fire engines.

"To use them like we need to, we would need them to be able to run the apparatus," he said. "Due to union contracts, they can't do that. I don't believe someone who does this job without the proper training should be working on apparatuses which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars."

Prior to the 1998 annual town meeting, Haddad proposed eliminating the call fire department and using those funds to train some of the town's full-time firefighters to become paramedics.

Selectmen at the time were unanimously in support of the call department, however, and halted Haddad's initiative in its tracks.

Sullivan is still reluctant to eliminate the call department.

"I can't support getting rid of the call firefighters," she said. "I know I may get outvoted, but I can't support it. I'd agree to reduce the amount they are paid, but I think anyone willing to risk his life for the town is important."

With the town's paramedic service now underway, selectmen chairman Merle Brown said his opinion about the need for a call fire department has changed from two years ago.

"I happen to go along with it this time," Brown said of Haddad's proposed elimination of the call department. "We happen to be more of an emergency service department now. There just doesn't seem to be a need for the call department anymore. It's time for things to change. With paramedic service, the call department seems to be a thing of the past, not the future."

Call fire departments have become a thing of the past in towns such as Hingham, Hull, and Scituate, while other area towns, such as Hanover and Norwell, still depend largely on their call fire departments to supplement full-time firefighters.

In Norwell, fire chief Paul Rosebach said his town's call fire department has been reduced sharply since the early 1970's, when the town had a call force of 75.

"Our career department only started in 1972, and now we have 17 full-time firefighters and 16 in the call department," Rosebach said. "There's been more emphasis placed on career personnel in the last 15 years and that's really a nationwide trend. We don't depend nearly as much on our call department as we did five or 10 years ago."

Hanover fire chief Steve Tucker oversees a combination department of 18 full-time firefighters and 55 call firefighters. Though the number of call firefighters in Hanover has been reduced from the 90 to 100 common during the 1970's, Tucker said the town still relies heavily on the call department.

"We depend on them," Tucker said of his department's call firefighters. "They're assigned to five stations in town and respond to all fire calls as well as backup ambulance calls."

Unlike the Cohasset call department, Hanover's call firefighters are allowed to drive fire vehicles and run pumps. The large call department has been a proving ground for firefighters wishing to join the full-time force.

"I've been the chief here for 14 or 15 years and this is the system I grew up with," Tucker said. "I was a call firefighter and 15 of our 18 full-time firefighters came from the call department as well."

Last year, Haddad said he got the message from selectmen and fully funded the call fire department. He said he is revisiting the issue due to changes in the fire department caused by the implementation of paramedic care.

"Things have changed a bit now that we have five or six paramedics," Haddad said. "The paramedic service will serve a larger pool of people than will the call fire department. I'd like to see us really concentrate on our paramedic program. I know it [eliminating the call department]may not be a popular decision, but sometimes tough choices have to be made."

Bellefontaine said he feels the call department is still a value to the town.

"You get a dozen guys for $30,000, which is less than the salary of one of the new paramedics," he said. "What if the town has a rash of fires? Selectmen will have to make the call."

Selectman Tom Callahan offered a suggestion which would save the institution of the call fire department while adhering to Haddad's budget.

"Why not have a call fire department without the money," he said. "These guys only make $2,000-$3,000 a year on average doing this, so they're obviously not doing it for the money. A volunteer call department would allow these guys to keep doing what they love."

Members of the call fire department will be able to respond to Callahan's proposal when they appear at the Jan. 25 selectmen's meeting.

'Pay As You Throw' is back on agenda

town meeting. Selectmen, however, put off the vote for a year to better educate the public about the program.

Despite a series of educational forums held by the recycling committee, the program was voted down at the 1998 annual town meeting by a vote of 72-54. Brown, however, remains unconvinced of the town's opposition to pay-as-you-throw.

"The town meeting vote on the program wasn't until 11:30 at night," he said. "Many of the people who stayed around were those who were really against it."

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, selectman Diane Sullivan said larger families may find the program discriminatory because they are likely to produce more trash than smaller families.

Brown said those who discard more trash should pay a larger percentage of the town's trash disposal costs.

"It's a user fee," Brown said. "Why should a couple with no children who throws out a bag a week pay the same amount as a family of five who throws out three or four bags a week.?"

Ron Massa, 140 N. Main St., was one of the major opponents to pay-as-you throw in 1998, and said he still has problems with the concept. He said his major concern is ensuring that any change in the trash disposal system be made by town meeting vote.

"The big bulk of my concern in 1997 was the arrogance of some of our town fathers, who thought they could just push this program through without the people's consent. Fortunately, they withdrew the idea and let town meeting decide the next year. If they want to re-introduce another article, fine. If the people of the town want pay-as-you-throw, I don't have a problem with it. But the people should decide, not the selectmen."

One factor which may help the chances of pay-as-you-throw being accepted by town meeting is the remarkable increase in recycling seen in neighboring Scituate since it instituted the program last July.

According to Scituate Highway and Landfill supervisor Mike Breen, recycling has gone up 30 percent since the implementation of pay-as-you-throw.

"Under this program, the biggest way to save money is by recycling," Breen said. "Residents can recycle yard waste, aluminum cans, plastic and glass bottles, corrugated cardboard, newspapers and junk mail. There really isn't too much you can't recycle, especially if people shop with recycling in mind."

Breen said the most difficult part about implementing the program in Scituate was making sure residents were abiding by the regulations.

"The biggest headache we had was monitoring it," he said. "We had to overstaff the transfer station at first to keep people from bringing in other trash bags. It took a while, but I think people have adjusted to it. I've seen larger families go from five bags a week to two. A lot of families get by with one bag a week. It gets like a contest to see who can use the least amount of bags."

Massa said the situation is a bit different in Cohasset, where the RTF has existed for 10 years, as opposed to Scituate, where the town landfill closed only last January.

"We're in a substantially different situation in Cohasset, where we already recycle a great deal," he said. "Personally, I don't feel the expense of $1 a bag will be worth it."

The town of Scituate pays $65 per ton to transport trash to SEMASS, the waste to energy plant in Rochester, while Cohasset pays approximately $80 per ton, according to recycling committee member Arthur Lehr. By recycling more, the cost of shipping trash to SEMASS will likely be reduced.

Selectman Tom Callahan, another proponent of pay-as-you-throw, said the program has been shown to increase recycling and is likely to reduce taxes.

"I think pay-as-you-throw has three major benefits to the people in Cohasset," he said. "First, it provides a financial benefit to improve recycling. Second, it will reduce the costs of transporting trash to SEMASS, which will result in a tax savings. Finally, if people even do moderately aggressive recycling, I think the costs can come in well under the current $85 sticker fee we all pay to use the RTF."

In his budget proposal to selectmen last week, Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested increasing the $85 RTF sticker fee to $100 in order to raise $27,000 for a new DPW laborer position at the RTF. Sticker fees for senior citizens are to remain at $65.

Callahan said a new employee will be needed at the RTF with pay-as-you-throw or the current system.

"We're going to need someone to monitor things down there either way," he said. "If we do pay-as-you-throw, I'm confident we can find the money for that position somewhere else in Mark's budget."

Haddad said he had no opinion one way or the other regarding the benefits of pay-as-you-throw, saying he was only concerned about the RTF's financial viability.

"My only concern is that the same revenue comes in," he said. "[Town Accountant] Michael Buckley and I have estimated bringing in $169,000 based on the $100 sticker fee. Instituting pay-as-you-throw would be a major policy decision, and those kinds of choices should be made by the Board of Selectmen."

If it's up to Callahan, pay-as-you-throw could become Cohasset's trash disposal system.

"As far as I know, it's shown to increase recycling and decrease the amount shipped to SEMASS," he said. "I don't know what's the big deal with trying it."

Cohasset woman represented USA in Olympic pairs skating

ple, and some of the couples ahead of us didn't do as well as expected," she said. "We came in second and made the team. It was such a shock. Our families had to rush to get tickets to Austria, because we honestly didn't expect to make it."

At a time when most people her age were approaching the last semester of their high school careers, Cook was heading across the Atlantic to compete on the world's most renowned athletic stage.

She and Fauver finished 12th at the Olympics in a competition dominated by couples from the Soviet Union and East Germany. Pairs skating was the first figure skating event held, allowing her to enjoy the rest of her time in Austria with the competition complete.

"It was nice to get the pressure off three days into the Olympics," she said. "I was able to relax the rest of the time and just enjoy being there."

Cook and Fauver finished ninth in the 1976 World Championships, held two weeks after the Olympics, their highest finish in international competition.

After finishing the competition, Cook found herself at a proverbial fork in the road. She had to decide whether to undertake four more rigorous years of practicing and competing for one more chance at Olympic glory or to head off to college like all of her friends were back home.

"I had to decide 'Do you want to skate or do you want to go to college?'" she said. "We certainly weren't going to win in the Olympics, because the Russians and East Germans were the best, by far. We weren't even going to be the best in the U.S., because Tai Babilonia and Randy Gardner were ahead of us and they were younger. I had to decide if I wanted to hang on four more years for an opportunity which might not come. I also really wanted to go to school with people my own age, which I had missed the last couple years."

Cook enrolled at Boston College, were she majored in history and speech communications. A member of BC's class of 1980, she said the transition from the rigors of elite skating to the relative sloth of college freshman life was difficult.

"It was a very tough adjustment going from being so scheduled, disciplined, and physically fit to eating cafeteria food and going out at night," she said. "It wasn't until my junior year that I really felt comfortable."

Without the professional skating opportunities which exist today, even those like Cook who had been elite skaters had little chance to earn a comfortable living in the sport at the time of her college graduation in 1980.

Upon her graduation, she taught ice skating for a year, but a career in the media soon came calling.

"I was invited to do a pilot for a television show called "Ice Time," which never got on the air, but at least I had something on my audition tape," she said.

That audition tape landed Cook her first job at WSBK-38 in Boston, where she worked on feature stories for Bruins and Red Sox telecasts from 1982 to 1984.

With her television career underway, Cook moved on to WBZ-4 in October 1984 as a sports producer for the 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. newscasts.

In January 1985, Cook worked her way into the sports department , where she has covered college and national sporting events such as the Super Bowl and World Series as well as the 1994 Winter Olympics in Lillehammer, Norway, where she, naturally, covered figure skating.

In addition to her duties at WBZ, Cook has also done outside work for Turner Sports, covering figure skating at the 1998 Winter Olympics in Nagano, Japan.

"I hosted a show called "The Cutting Edge," which focused on stories about the skaters," she said. "It was like the Entertainment Tonight of skating."

Cook also covered the figure skating competitions in the Turner-sponsored Goodwill Games and even did one NASCAR event for the network.

"I remember it be being really loud and really hot," she said of her NASCAR reporting experience. "There are definitely some very interesting people in NACSAR, though."

When not immersed in her television commitments, Cook is likely to be found spending time with her family in Cohasset. All three of her children are involved in skating lessons, and she said they are aware of her athletic past.

"I don't know how much the fact that I was in the Olympics means to them yet, but they've seen my old skating clips, which I'm sorry to admit are films, not videotapes," she laughed.

Auction 2000 — a Chinese New Year Experience Feb. 5 coincides with the centuries-old Chinese New Year celebration and will feature many aspects of a traditional New Year's celebration, including a Chinese buffet provided by the Beijing House. Adding to the festive atmosphere will be traditional decorations, live and silent auctions under the direction of Broad Cove Auctions, a Chinese basket auction and surprise fortune cookies.

Tickets for this event are $25 per person and may be purchased from any PSO executive board member or by calling Marie Kelly at 383-1924.

Area businesses looking to support the Cohasset schools through the PSO are invited to participate in Auction 2000 by donating items for inclusion in the auction or by advertising in the evening's program. To place a full-page ad for $50 or a half-page ad for $25 or to make an item donation to the auction call Kathi Yeager at 383-9820.

'Tribute in Brass' to perform

"Tribute in Brass," a nine-piece brass ensemble from Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) in Quincy, will perform a concert of sacred music Sunday, Jan. 30, at Beechwood Congregational Church. The concert, sponsored by Sunday Nights at Beechwood Church, located at 51 Church St. in Cohasset, will be held at 7 p.m. The event is open to the public. An offering will be collected to help defray the costs of the concert.

The ensemble was formed in 1997 by director Chris Boel. The group consists of three trumpets, French horn, two trombones, tuba, piano and synthesizer, and percussion. "Tribute in Brass" performs in concert at churches, schools and other events.

Even before excellent instrumental performance, however, the ensemble is committed to helping its audiences to worship. The concert will be interspersed with scripture and with the testimonies of various members. Members of the group are a combination of students from Eastern Nazarene College and local alumni/ae. Director Chris Boel is a graduate of ENC, receiving his BA in Trumpet Performance, and serves on the music department faculty.

Eastern Nazarene College is a fully accredited, coeducational, Christian liberal arts college, offering more than 50 traditional undergraduate programs, as well as a broad array of programs in the non-traditional format for working adults. In 2000, ENC begins a year-long celebration of its centennial, an institution dedicated to providing high quality education to students from many different Christian denominations and backgrounds in an atmosphere which fosters service to God, the church and the world.

Beechwood Congregational Church was established in 1863. Dr. Branson Roberts has been the pastor since September, 1998.

Dr. King remembered at First Parish

In honoring Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. this Sunday from the pulpit of the First Parish Meeting House, The Rev. Colin Leitch will join many others in recognizing Dr. King as clearly one of the great Americans of the 20th century. His memory is revered by Americans for helping all of us to take those large steps towards overcoming the racial divide that has plagued our country since its founding.

Many remember Dr. King being labeled a "troublemaker" and being investigated by the F.B.I. The sermon at First Parish this Sunday will explore Dr. King's methods that led his most vocal adversary, Gov. George Wallace of Alabama, to admit during the last years of his life that he had been wrong, and to ask for forgiveness.

Pollution solution for pet waste

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Now that the town's pooper-scooper regulation is in effect, the board of health wants to facilitate its compliance.

To that end, the board hopes to place "Mutt Mitts" in dispensers at strategic areas around town.

Mutt Mitts are disposal plastic baggies that dog owners can use to pick up their pets' waste and toss it in a trash container.

In a memo to Town Manager Mark Haddad, health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik suggested dispensers should be placed at the Sandy Beach parking lot, Government Island and the cemeteries around town. Haddad assured selectmen this week that no dispensers would be placed on the common.

Although selectmen do not object to the Mutt Mitts, a least one selectman questioned whether they'd be used.

"Who would do that even with a plastic glove?" Tom Callahan asked.

Mutt Mitts are disposal plastic baggies that dog owners can use to pick up their pets' waste and toss it in a trash container.

The total cost of purchasing mitts and four dispensers is about $780, Godzik said. The money will come out of the health board's budget.

The biodegradable Mutt Mitts are distributed by Intelligent Products Inc. (IPI) of Burlington, Kentucky and are manufactured in Chicago.

The mitts also protect DPW personnel from health risks when emptying trash containers, IPI said.

The health board enacted the pooper-scooper regulation that can impose fines for dog owners who either willfully or through failure to exercise control allow their dog to defecate on any public place or private property other than their own. The regulation went into effect Jan. 1. Fines are $25 for the first offense, $35 for the second and $50 for the third or subsequent offense.

Problem areas in town include the town common where kids play ball and people often sit on the grass to enjoy carillon concerts.

The town's animal control officer — who drives around town a lot — brought the proposed regulation before the health board last fall. At the time, he said the problem in town had gotten out of control.

"Pooper-scoopers," which are plastic or metal devices to collect pet waste are readily available in pet stores and range in price from about $8-$20.

But IPI said Mutt Mitts are more sanitary because scoops or shovels are not disposable and get dirty with pet waste. An IPI spokesman said the company distributes Mutt Mitts to "tons of municipalities across the country."

Godzik said Mutt Mitts could also be available at the police station and in village stores if storekeepers were willing to dispense them.

Haddad doesn't think vandalism of the dispensers will be a problem.

No easy answer to feral cat problem

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If the feral cats will ever be completely gone from James Lane is anybody's guess.

But what is apparent is that local cat enthusiasts have won the day and saved the animals from possible euthanasia — at least for the time being.

The health board discussed enacting regulations governing feral cats again this week. Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik will draw up the regulation — which will parallel those in place for stray dogs — to be voted on at the health board's next meeting. Dog laws allow towns to put the animals down if not claimed after a holding period, usually 10 days.

In the meantime as weeks and then months passed since a group of James Lane neighbors first filed a complaint with the health board about the wild cats last September, volunteers have worked behind the scenes to find their own solution.

Elsa Miller, founder of the non-profit group CATS, has personally rescued about 20 of the cats most of which are now living with her in her Reservoir Road home. She hopes to tame them so they can be adopted.

However, there are still at least five cats still residing on James Lane, which are being fed by Edward Sweeney, 15 James Lane, who says he's adopted the animals.

Margaret E. Taylor, 21 James Lane, who lives next door, says Sweeney feeds the cats outside and the animals then come over into her yard to relieve themselves creating an odor problem. She and another neighbor John Connell, 25 James Lane, attended the health board meeting this week to urge the board to rid the street of the remaining cats because they are worried those cats will attract more.

"There is no one way to solve the problem."
— Robin Lawrence, health board

But health board members said that if the cats, which have been tested and vaccinated, don't present a health problem then it might be beyond their purview to tell someone they can't feed the cats outside.

And Sweeney, who admits the feral cat colony had gotten out of control, says the five remaining cats are healthy animals that have been vaccinated and altered. He says the cat problem has been overblown by residents who just don't like cats.

"I invite anyone to come down to James Lane and tell me if they can smell cats," he said.

Chairman Alix White offered to help Taylor, who is disabled, spray her garden and walkway with some cat repellent oil available at local pet stores and supermarkets. The board voted to spend about $10 to buy the product.

At last month's meeting Linda Brooks of Nichols Road, who works with Tufts and knows experts on feral cats, brought studies on the subject for the board to peruse.

Members said this week that the report doesn't provide any easy answers but welcomed the educational information.

"There's no real solution," member Robin Lawrence said. "There is no one way to solve the problem."

All agreed that education of pet owners is the long-term answer. That means cat owners should have their animals vaccinated, spayed or neutered, and not allow them to roam outside.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID
THE INNER LIFE OF LINING
Not only do linings protect window treatments from the deteriorating effect of direct sun, but they also provide some aesthetic benefits. Many drapery styles need a contrast color lining or small pattern as the lining will show. Blackout linings will eliminate show through of seams when the sun is shining. Depending on the style of a treatment, inter-lining can add extra body that dramatically changes the drapery's appearance. For instance, pleated draperies have a more professional appearance when inter-lined. They also tend to open and close more neatly due to the added weight. When choosing lining, pay particular attention to the fiber content of the face fabric. Most professionals use a 100-percent-cotton lining, which is versatile and provides stability for many fabric types.
The interior design specialists at THE DESIGNING WOMAN can create the custom designs you want. We'll visit your home to measure and estimate the type of window treatment that meets your needs and fits your room and budget. Everything from style, pattern and color selection are discussed before creating the design to highlight your windows and complement your decor. From concept to installation, you can rely on us for thoughtful attention to detail. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.
HINT: Interlining is a very soft flannel, usually 100% cotton.

Village station revisited

Planning board votes to bring idea back to selectmen

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The possibility of a commuter rail station in Cohasset Village may be back from the dead.

At a contentious meeting last Wednesday attended by both advocates and opponents of a village station, the planning board voted unanimously to bring the idea back to selectmen.

"Where we put the station is literally a once-in-a-century decision," said planning board member Robert Sturdy. "I'd like to see if this board would work with downtown interests to persuade selectmen to reverse their decision and go with the village station."

Selectmen voted in November 1996 to put the station at the site of the former Wintergarden Skating Rink on Route 3A. The MBTA has included the 3A station in its subsequent draft mitigation plans, which have been used for negotiations between the MBTA and the town's Greenbush mitigation committee.

The vote by selectmen came on the heels of a straw poll taken at the Oct. 1996 special town meeting. Residents at the meeting voted for the 3A station by a vote of 311-112.

Selectmen Merle Brown, who was a member of the board when it voted for the 3A station in 1996, said he still feels the 3A station is in the town's best interests. He said the issue of where to place

Village upgrade effort kicks into high gear

Ordelheide, Roy donate money to help fund plans

"If you look at downtown Cohasset and compare it to Hingham and other towns, it's obvious a lot needs to be done."
— Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide

Two of the town's major movers and shakers have joined forces in an attempt to kick-start a combined revitalization effort in Cohasset Harbor and Cohasset Village.

Peter Roy, owner of Kimball's By-The-Sea and the Atlantica Restaurant, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide both donated what Village Revitalization Task Force chairman Dean Rizzo termed a 'substantial' amount of money to support an effort to generate funding for infrastructure improvements in the village and harbor.

Rizzo said including the town's primary business owners in the revitalization effort was a natural for the Task Force.

"Knowing the work they're both doing in the village and the harbor, we felt it was important to get their thoughts on the process. We're forging a relationship which makes sense."

While Rizzo was unwilling to specify the amount each donated, he said the money will be the starting point of an expanded effort to improve the village and harbor.

"Their generous donation will provide the seed money for preliminary studies, design work, and construction drawings," he said. "Peter and Gerd are obviously interested and concerned with the state of infrastructure in the village and harbor."

Ordelheide said the effort needed a major benefactor or two to get off the

Hagerty chairman hopes for changes by boating season

A television commercial for a national restaurant chain proclaims its Big-Mouth Burgers to be "Monuments of Inefficiency."

The Hagerty Property Committee, which has been in existence since the town bought the waterfront property at the end of Parker Ave. in 1993, could also go by that moniker.

Even the committee's new chairman, Russ Bonetti, admits the committee does not have a record of accomplishment. He said the size of the original committee, which numbered close to 15, made it nearly impossible to come to decisions quickly and take action.

"It took a year for us to figure out what to do with the boathouse alone," said the mustachioed, long-haired Bonetti, who lives down the street from the property at 20 Parker Ave. "On top of that, the historical commission didn't want us to touch a thing. We weren't having regular meetings and it was a long, drawn-out battle to get anything done."

Bonetti, who has been a member of the committee since its inception, hopes to change the committee's reputation by getting results for the town. He said the committee still has $45,000 of the original $100,000 the committee received from an anonymous donor and the private Cohasset Conservation Trust, which each donated $50,000.

"Most of the money went to demolishing the buildings which were there," Bonetti said of the old manufacturing buildings which were

Pollution solution for pet waste

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Now that the town's pooper-scooper regulation is in effect, the board of health wants to facilitate its compliance.

To that end, the board hopes to place "Mutt Mitts" in dispensers at strategic areas around town.

Mutt Mitts are disposal plastic baggies that dog owners can use to pick up their pets' waste and toss it in a trash container.

In a memo to Town Manager Mark Haddad, health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik suggested dispensers should be placed at the Sandy Beach parking lot, Government Island and the cemeteries around town. Haddad assured selectmen this week that no dispensers would be placed on the common.

Although selectmen do not object to the Mutt Mitts, a least one selectman questioned whether they'd be used.

"Who would do that even with a plastic glove?" Tom Callahan asked.

Mutt Mitts are disposal plastic baggies that dog owners can use to pick up their pets' waste and toss it in a trash container.

The total cost of purchasing mitts and four dispensers is about $780, Godzik said. The money will come out of the health board's budget.

The biodegradable Mutt Mitts are distributed by Intelligent Products Inc. (IPI) of Burlington, Kentucky and are manufactured in Chicago.

The mitts also protect DPW personnel from health risks when emptying trash containers, IPI said.

The health board enacted the pooper-scooper regulation that can impose fines for dog owners who either willfully or through failure to exercise control allow their dog to defecate on any public place or private property other than their own. The regulation went into effect Jan. 1. Fines are $25 for the first offense, $35 for the second and $50 for the third or subsequent offense.

Problem areas in town include the town common where kids play ball and people often sit on the grass to enjoy carillon concerts.

The town's animal control officer — who drives around town a lot — brought the proposed regulation before the health board last fall. At the time, he said the problem in town had gotten out of control.

"Pooper-scoopers," which are plastic or metal devices to collect pet waste are readily available in pet stores and range in price from about $8-$20.

But IPI said Mutt Mitts are more sanitary because scoops or shovels are not disposable and get dirty with pet waste. An IPI spokesman said the company distributes Mutt Mitts to "tons of municipalities across the country."

Godzik said Mutt Mitts could also be available at the police station and in village stores if storekeepers were willing to dispense them.

Haddad doesn't think vandalism of the dispensers will be a problem.

No easy answer to feral cat problem

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

If the feral cats will ever be completely gone from James Lane is anybody's guess.

But what is apparent is that local cat enthusiasts have won the day and saved the animals from possible euthanasia — at least for the time being.

The health board discussed enacting regulations governing feral cats again this week. Health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik will draw up the regulation — which will parallel those in place for stray dogs — to be voted on at the health board's next meeting. Dog laws allow towns to put the animals down if not claimed after a holding period, usually 10 days.

In the meantime as weeks and then months passed since a group of James Lane neighbors first filed a complaint with the health board about the wild cats last September, volunteers have worked behind the scenes to find their own solution.

Elsa Miller, founder of the non-profit group CATS, has personally rescued about 20 of the cats most of which are now living with her in her Reservoir Road home. She hopes to tame them so they can be adopted.

However, there are still at least five cats still residing on James Lane, which are being fed by Edward Sweeney, 15 James Lane, who says he's adopted the animals.

Margaret E.Taylor, 21 James Lane, who lives next door, says Sweeney feeds the cats outside and the animals then come over into her yard to relieve themselves creating an odor problem. She and another neighbor John Connell, 25 James Lane, attended the health board meeting this week to urge the board to rid the street of the remaining cats because they are worried those cats will attract more.

"There is no one way to solve the problem."
— Robin Lawrence, health board

But health board members said that if the cats, which have been tested and vaccinated, don't present a health problem then it might be beyond their purview to tell someone they can't feed the cats outside.

And Sweeney, who admits the feral cat colony had gotten out of control, says the five remaining cats are healthy animals that have been vaccinated and altered. He says the cat problem has been overblown by residents who just don't like cats.

"I invite anyone to come down to James Lane and tell me if they can smell cats," he said.

Chairman Alix White offered to help Taylor, who is disabled, spray her garden and walkway with some cat repellent oil available at local pet stores and supermarkets. The board voted to spend about $10 to buy the product.

At last month's meeting Linda Brooks of Nichols Road, who works with Tufts and knows experts on feral cats, brought studies on the subject for the board to peruse.

Members said this week that the report doesn't provide any easy answers but welcomed the educational information.

"There's no real solution," member Robin Lawrence said. "There is no one way to solve the problem."

All agreed that education of pet owners is the long-term answer. That means cat owners should have their animals vaccinated, spayed or neutered, and not allow them to roam outside.

THE INNER LIFE OF LINING

Not only do linings protect window treatments from the deteriorating effect of direct sun, but they also provide some aesthetic benefits. Many drapery styles need a contrast color lining or small pattern as the lining will show. Blackout linings will eliminate show through of seams when the sun is shining. Depending on the style of a treatment, inter-lining can add extra body that dramatically changes the drapery's appearance. For instance, pleated draperies have a more professional appearance when inter-lined. They also tend to open and close more neatly due to the added weight. When choosing lining, pay particular attention to the fiber content of the face fabric. Most professionals use a 100-percent-cotton lining, which is versatile and provides stability for many fabric types.

The interior design specialists at THE DESIGNING WOMAN can create the custom designs you want. We'll visit your home to measure and estimate the type of window treatment that meets your needs and fits your room and budget. Everything from style, pattern and color selection are discussed before creating the design to highlight your windows and complement your decor. From concept to installation, you can rely on us for thoughtful attention to detail. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

Election update

No new candidates emerged this week for the open selectmen's seat which is being vacated this April by Diane Sullivan.

Leland Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road, is the lone candidate to obtain nomination papers for the open seat in preparation for the April 8 town election.

Three incumbents have elected to run again for the Library Trustees. Agnes McCann pulled her papers last week, while both Patience Towle and Carol Riley did so this week.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil also picked up nomination papers this week.

The only other citizen to cement a run for elected office is water commissioner John McNabb, who will seek reelection.

The last day to procure nomination papers from the town clerk's office is Thursday, Feb. 17.

School facilities committee schedule

School facilities committee chairman announced a new schedule of meetings for the committee, which meets at the selectmen's meeting room in Town Hall.

The committee will meet next Wednesday, Jan. 26 as well as the following Wednesday, Feb. 2. At the Feb. 2 meeting, Spofford said the he will update the public about the possibility of having meetings in addition to the committee's usual Wednesday meeting.

"We're still going to meet Feb. 9, Feb. 16., and Feb. 23 (all Wednesdays), that much is for sure," Spofford said. "On Feb. 2, we may call additional meetings if we feel they are necessary."

Citizens can keep themselves appraised of the committee's progress by attending any of its 7 p.m. meetings or by watching the meetings on cable channel 3.

Offers expertise to selectmen

As the town approaches bidding out janitorial services for various town buildings, selectmen have received an offer of assistance to help them through the process.

Glenn Pratt, 482 King St., who has been involved in the building services business for nearly 30 years, wrote a letter to selectmen to help them put together the proposal on which interested companies will bid.

In his letter to selectmen, Pratt said outsourcing janitorial services was long overdue.

"The move will be a tremendous benefit to the town, the tenants of the buildings, and the persons charged with managing the building maintenance," he said.

Recommends town meeting changes

Town Manager Mark Haddad related selectmen's concerns about town meeting procedures in a Jan. 12 letter to Town Moderator George Marlette.

Selectmen had voted 3-1, with Ronnie McMorris against, to write the letter to Marlette at the board's Jan. 11 meeting. Marlette has been unable to meet with selectmen due to scheduling conflict.

Selectmen recommended to Marlette that articles on the town meeting warrant be randomly selected, so special interests would be limited in their ability to "pack" a meeting.

"We usually see people pack town meeting and pass an article, only to see it lose at an override election," said Selectman Tom Callahan.

McMorris said she had no problem with the practice of "packing" town meeting.

"I don't support random selection," she said. "It's not necessarily bad for people to come to town meeting for one particular issue. It may keep them coming back in the future."

Selectmen also asked Marlette to give a brief description of each article as its number is called at the beginning of the meeting and to read the entire motion of an article once it is held.

In the letter, Haddad invited Marlette to meet with selectmen to discuss the issues in more detail.

Nomination papers now available

Nomination papers for the Annual Town Election Saturday, April 8, are now available at the Town Clerk's office during normal office hours. In order to hold an elected office, a person must be a registered voter in the town. The following positions will be open.

- Selectmen (one) for a three-year term.
- School Committee (two) for a three-year term.
- Trustees Paul Pratt Memorial Library (three) for a 3-year term.
- Assessors (one) for a 3-year term.
- Board of Health (one) for a 3-year term.
- Cohasset Housing Authority (one) for a five-year term.
- Planning Board (one) for a five-year term.
- Recreation Commission (one) for a five-year term.
- Sewer Commissioner (one) for a three-year term.
- Water Commissioner (one) for a three-year term.

Last day to obtain nomination papers is Thursday, Feb. 17.

Praised for work on Teen Garage

Recreation director Jack Worley sent a letter to building commissioner Bob Egan last week thanking him for his help and support on the Teen Garage project.

"During the past 13 months, your advice has been vital and most appreciated, making our work much easier," Worley wrote. "Doing a project of this magnitude on donated funds is difficult, however, more difficult was doing this project with very limited knowledge of construction. Your assistance, ideas, and input has been a tremendous help to us."

Town census for 2000

The Town Census for 2000 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists, but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible. If you did not receive one, call the Town Clerk's office.

Ten minutes for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

The next selectmen's meeting is Tuesday, Jan 25.

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

New subdivision is planned

Site lies between Beechwood Street and Bound Brook

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

How will Cohasset grow? The possibilities have been bandied about recently by numerous town boards, as officials attempt to predict and plan for an increased population. To plan for future growth, Town Manager Mark Haddad has included the cost of a part-time town planner in his proposed Fiscal Year 2001 budget.

While members of many town boards have expressed concern regarding the possibility of explosive town growth, others have said Cohasset's future growth is likely to be characterized by sporadic fits and starts.

A preliminary site plan for a new seven-lot subdivision between Beechwood Street and Bound Brook may show the manner in which future growth will proceed. Applicant Dustin Wheelwright and engineer Roger Wait appeared at the planning board's meeting last Wednesday to discuss the preliminary plan.

Building commissioner Bob Egan, who was present at last Wednesday's meeting, said the seven-lot subdivision may be one of the larger ones the town sees in the coming years.

"I can't see any 20 to 25 house subdivisions coming in," he said. "Assuming this thing gets approved, there are still only seven lots on 40 acres, because of wetlands issues. It's going to be tough to find a place in town to put in a huge subdivision."

Wait said the seven lots will vary from 1.5 to 4 acres. Though the Wheelwright family land totals 40 acres, only half of the land is buildable due to a large network of bordering vegetated wetlands. A no-build zone of 200 feet from Bound Brook also minimizes the number of lots which can be created on the property.

A new, 350-foot roadway and cul-de-sac are planned to connect the lots to Beechwood Street. Two common driveways, one measuring 355 feet and the other measuring 500 feet, extend from the bottom of the cul-de-sac to provide access to the lots.

According to Wait, the driveways have been designed to limit wetlands alteration to 2,400 square feet, within the 2,500 square-foot limit in the town bylaw. Keeping wetlands alteration within 2,500 square feet will likely eliminate the need to apply to the zoning board of appeals for a special permit to build in a watershed zone.

Wheelwright said he thinks the houses in the subdivision will likely be four or five bedrooms, but said he envisions selling lots and letting people build what they want

The plan which Wait and Wheelwright presented did not include any sidewalks, which planning board chairman Al Moore said would have to be part of any definitive subdivision plan.

"Even in relatively small subdivisions, we've only waived the need for a sidewalk on one side of the road," he said. "There has to be at least one sidewalk."

Moore pointed out another potential problem with the plan, saying one of the proposed home sites extended into the 200-foot no-build zone from Bound Brook.

Wait said the house sites may change when a definitive subdivision plan is submitted to the planning board and conservation commission.

"Assuming this thing gets approved, there are still only seven lots on 40 acres, because of wetlands issues. It's going to be tough to find a place in town to put in a huge subdivision."
Building commissioner Bob Egan

Planning board member Robert Sturdy said provisions for fire department vehicles may need to be added to the plan before a definitive version is submitted.

"I think the fire department will want to see something other than a turn-around which is 250 feet away from some of these lots," Sturdy said about the proposed cul-de-sac. "There has to be a way for an ambulance and a fire truck to turn around."

In addition to his concerns about access for safety vehicles, Sturdy also wanted to hear for the Board of Health regarding the suitability of building a septic system on the property.

"I want to hear about the likelihood of a septic system failing or not failing," he said. "The last thing we need is a recurrence of the problems up on Mendel Road."

Sturdy suggested the possibility of creating a homeowner's association to maintain the access road to Beechwood Street, which he reasoned might be neglected if homeowners are not directly responsible for its upkeep.

"If the roadway isn't maintained, I'm worried it could become unsightly and full of beer cans," he said. "The people might say, 'The heck with it, it isn't near my house.' I'd like you to consider some mechanism of maintenance mechanism so there isn't an ugly road that leads to beautiful houses.

Wheelwright said he would consider a homeowner's association, but said he really hadn't thought that far ahead.

"I think an association might come up later," he said. "All kinds of things are still in the cards. To be honest, we haven't gotten that far yet."

During the course of Wednesday night's discussion, Moore read a letter from the Board of Health which said the Wheelwright family land contained valued wetlands and should be put in a conservation trust.

Health agent Joseph Godzik said concerns about impervious surfaces near valued wetlands caused the Board of Health to write the letter.

"The Board of Health is concerned about surface water drainage in that area and about the threat to water sources," Godzik said.

Moore said any threat to surrounding wetlands would be dealt with by the conservation commission if and when they receive a definitive site plan for the proposed subdivision.

"Whether or not this land should be in a conservation trust is out of the purview of the Board of Health and the planning board," he said. "Our concern is one of traffic and overall impact. The delicacy of this issue will most likely rest with the conservation commission. Any approval that this board grants or doesn't grant does not supersede the conservation commission."

While he said issues of compliance with wetlands statutes should be handled by the conservation commission, Moore did have environmental concerns about building seven homes on the property. He asked Wait and Wheelwright to flag all substantial trees when submitting any definitive site plan.

"Obviously, some trees will be cut down, but I'm concerned with saving as many of the big trees as we can," he said.

Wait said he didn't feel it would be long before both the conservation commission and planing board receive a definitive site plan. Once it is received, the planning board will have 90 days to act upon the definitive site plan.

First snow wreaks havoc

Six accidents on Thursday as drivers caught unaware

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Like an annoying guest who overstays his welcome, Old Man Winter just won't go away.

Though it had seemed as if New Englanders might escape all vestiges of their usual winter, a reminder of the region's more typical climate came last Thursday afternoon when five inches of snow fell and temperatures plummeted.

According to Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling, temperatures dropped to zero degrees last Saturday evening, the first zero degree reading since it was minus one on January 19,1997.

The cold temperatures caused falling snow to ice over on the town's roads almost immediately on Thursday, causing dangerous driving conditions which resulted in six accidents. No injuries were reported, however.

Cohasset police Sgt. Robert Jackson said it was an unusually high number of accidents, even for the region's first snowfall.

"We usually see an increase with the first snow, but six accidents is an inordinate amount," Jackson said. "Because it was so cold, the ice froze beneath the snow. It happened so quickly, before we could get sand out on the roads."

Acting DPW superintendent Tony Sestito said it was business as usual in his department when discussing the first snow.

"We got a little bit of a late start on Thursday, but we managed to deplete our sand pile," Sestito said. "We're trying to build it up for next week."

Jackson said Pond and Sohier Streets were closed temporarily on Thursday due to the dangerous conditions. In deference to the icy roads, afternoon kindergarten classes were cancelled Thursday as well.

"Because it was so cold, the ice froze beneath the snow. It happened so quickly, before we could get sand out on the roads."
— Cohasset police sergeant Robert Jackson

While many in Cohasset have Sport Utility Vehicles (SUVs) designed to handle well in wintry conditions, Jackson said SUV owners are often lulled into a false sense of security.

"A lot of people in SUVs think they can drive through anything because they have four-wheel drive," he said. "The laws of physics are the same with SUVs as they are with other vehicles. It takes the same number of feet for an SUV to stop as is it does for a car."

While motorists were grappling with icy roads, many other residents were rushing to area hardware stores to replenish their winter supplies.

"Once the first snow hits, everyone says 'Uh-oh' and rushes in here," said Rick Martina, an employee of Joseph's Hardware on Route 3A. "It's like they forget it's ever going to come. It was like a revolving door in here on Thursday and Friday."

Cohasset Hardware owner Tina Watson said her store saw a rush of customers buying shovels and Ice Melt, a substance people can put on their driveways, sidewalks, and steps to, well, melt ice.

Martina said customers in his store were buying shovels and Ice Melt as well, in addition to rock salt, gloves, driveway markers, and heaters to help counter the effects of frozen pipes due to the extremely cold temperatures. He was mystified about the rush to buy shovels.

"I'd love to know what these people do with their shovels from year to year," he said.

According to Skilling, the cold temperatures experienced since Thursday represent the region's coldest stretch of weather since January 1994. Early Monday morning saw dangerously cold temperatures with a temperature of zero degrees at 7 a.m. coupled with winds of 40 miles per hour. Windchill readings were as low as 40 to 50 below zero.

Anyone still wishing it would snow?

the station will likely be taken up by selectmen, though not at the board's next meeting on Jan. 25.

"I'm sure it will be brought before us, but I don't want the planning board coming before us at the next meeting, because we have too many other issues to discuss with the budget," he said.

Gail Whitehouse, 17 Ash St., an opponent of a village station in her neighborhood, said the 1996 vote should be honored and the idea of a village station put to rest.

"The town meeting vote was an educated vote," she said. "All the information was out there. It wasn't a haphazard thing."

Sturdy said the 1996 vote was as much anti-train as it was against a village station. He said a vote in 2000 might have a different outcome.

"The question people were asking was 'Where do I vote against the train?' he said. "If the question were structured differently, I think the vote would have been reversed."

Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber, who was not present at the planning board meeting, said the MBTA would likely consider a village station if selectmen requested the agency to do so. He added, however, that only a small window of time exists for selectmen to reconsider their previous decision.

"The T can't go beyond the 30 percent engineering point until they get environmental approvals," Gruber said. "Right now, those are being held up by questions about historic structures. Once that's settled, my feeling is the T is really going to move fast. Once they get to a certain point in the engineering, the issue will be moot, because it would cost too much to relocate the station."

MBTA spokesman Joe Pesaturo said the agency would not comment unless selectmen ask it to consider putting the station in the village.

"Unless we get a formal request, there's not much we can do," he said. "We're not going to deal in hypotheticals."

Members of the planning board have consistently argued for a village station since Greenbush debate began. While those living in the neighboring areas have loudly objected to a nearby train station planning board chairman Al Moore said their protestations may not be in the interests of the rest of the town.

"If I found out tomorrow that a sewage treatment plant was going up next to my house, I wouldn't be happy about it, but let's look at the big picture," he said. "Let's look at the whole picture and not just see the issue through the eyes of a few objectors who wag the whole dog."

In the MBTA's 1996 engineering design of a village station, the tracks were moved approximately 100 feet closer to James Lane and Pleasant Street to eliminate a dangerous curve and accommodate the 800-foot platform which all new stations must have to meet guidelines of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA).

To meet ADA requirements, each and every car must be handicapped-accessible, necessitating a high-level platform for the entire station.

One house, owned by Francis Carey, 8 James Lane, will have to be acquired by the MBTA and demolished to build a village station. Cynthia Maccleave, 9 James Lane, said moving the tracks 100 feet closer to her neighborhood will cause residents unnecessary harm.

"My neighbor's house will be gone and the tracks will be 10 feet from my door," she told members of the planning board. "With this and the expansion of the Red Lion Inn, we'll be living in Worcester."

Sturdy said the town could get a major amount of state money for village infrastructure repairs if the station is located in the center of town. In addition, he said safety concerns mandate a village station because trains will be forced to slow down as they go through the center of town, instead of passing through at 40 miles per hour.

Kevin O'Donnell, 248 King St., echoed Sturdy's safety concerns and said future tragedies may be averted by having a village station.

"I'm extremely worried about summertime safety, when kids are running all around the village area," O'Donnell said. "It's frightening to see these trains come through at 40 miles per hour. Over time, accidents happen. Eventually, we're going to lose a kid if the station is on 3A."

While many have concerns about a village station's potential effects upon safety, traffic, and downtown business, former mitigation committee member Michael Dick said accurate information should be gathered before a decision is made.

"We need proof that Mr. Sturdy's statements will come to pass," he said. "We need proof that a village station will benefit downtown business. We need data on traffic. I think we may find that this is too big an impact on downtown and we'd be doing great harm to the people who live near the tracks."

The issue of a village station has been revisited in large part because many in town, including Sturdy, believe the Greenbush commuter rail line is definitely coming to Cohasset.

Gruber, who deals with the MBTA as much as any other town official, said he believes Greenbush will become a reality.

"I absolutely get the feeling that the train is coming," he said. "No one's saying anything concrete, but all the indications I'm getting tell me it's going to happen."

If the train does indeed come, Sturdy said it is in the town's best interests to work cooperatively with the MBTA.

"If we work with the T, we can get a lot out of them," he said. "The T holds the trump cards and they can do whatever they want through eminent domain. They own the ball, the bat, and set the rules of the game. I want to see this town be in a win-win situation with the MBTA."

New Hagerty chairman is ready to get things done

owned by the now-defunct Cohasset Colonials furniture company.

For the first time since the committee was formed, significant progress on a proposed waterfront park on the property is imminent. Bonetti is confident permits for work on the two-acre property will soon be approved by the Army Corps of Engineers and the state Division of Waterways.

"We've got plans that are about to finally get approved," he said, knocking twice on his circular, wooden kitchen table.

Those plans include putting in rock riprap to stabilize the coastline and keep salt marsh from encroaching further, raising the parking lot 18 inches to prevent flooding, putting in a small picnic area, and adding a wooden boardwalk to connect the property with Government Island.

With only $45,000 left, Bonetti said the project will have to be completed in phases.

"We're going to go out to bid by the end of February to do the riprap and raise the parking lot, which we'd like to have finished by the start of boating season in the middle of May," he said. "The next step after that is to go to the town for the money to complete the other phases."

Hagerty committee clerk Hamilton Tewksbury said Bonetti's expertise on the committee and businesslike approach will serve the town well.

"He's been on the committee since it began and he's committed to it," Tewksbury said of the new chairman. "We're finally at the point where we're getting some action going in getting the park developed."

If we don't get this thing looking better, people are going to think twice before giving the town money for land again."

— Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti

The Hagerty property abuts the only public ramp in town for people to launch boats from, but Bonetti said boat enthusiasts shouldn't be the only group in town to enjoy the waterfront parcel.

"I don't want to see it just dedicated to boating," he said. "We want to get something down there for as many people as we can. We want the picnic area and boardwalk so a family could park here, eat lunch, and take a nice walk to Government Island. Everyone should be able to get some use of the property. The taxpayers are the ones paying for it."

While the committee now has a manageable six members, Bonetti said he would like to encourage anyone with architectural expertise to join and help with the bid process.

Bonetti said he has listened to the frustrations of fellow residents in the last few years who have been upset about the lack of progress on the property. He has also been disenchanted at times, but encourages those with gripes to help the committee find solutions.

"I haven't been happy with the way things have been going either," he said of the complaints of other residents. "I wish the people who complain would join the committee or come to our meetings. I'd like to see more public involvement in the project. We don't have all the answers. The more input we get, the better."

By June, Bonetti said he'd like to see the Lobster Lab building looking better and the shingling completed on the boathouse in addition to the rip rap and parking lot work. If the state of the property doesn't improve, he said serious repercussions could ensue in future years.

"If we don't get this thing looking better, people are going to think twice before giving the town money for land again," he said. "Quite frankly, I'd be skeptical myself. You can see by looking across the street (at the Cohasset Harbor Marina) what can be done."

One of the first changes Bonetti made upon become Hagerty chairman was to institute a regular meeting schedule. With such a large membership in the past, getting everyone together had proven difficult. Now, the committee meets on the third Wednesday of each month, with the next meeting scheduled Feb. 16 at 7:30 p.m.

At the next meeting, Bonetti and the other committee members will discuss the possibility of renaming the property.

"The town owns the land," he said. "There's no reason it has to be named the Hagerty property. I'd like to see what people's ideas are about naming it. There are a number of people who had a big impact in town who might be deserving of such an honor."

Village upgrade effort kicks into high gear

ground, and was happy to contribute to a cause which he feels will benefit the entire town.

"Peter [Roy] is driving this thing on the harbor, but it needed sponsorship in the village," Ordelheide said. "I was happy to contribute because I feel like we can make it a beautiful village. If you look at downtown Cohasset and compare it to Hingham and other towns, it's obvious a lot needs to be done."

Village harbor and merchants were the first to hear of the expanded revitalization effort at a meeting last Tuesday at Atlantica. Roy and Ordelheide were the guests of honor at the 2000 Chamber of Commerce annual meeting at Atlantica, held last night after the Mariner went to press, during which Chamber members were to be given an overview of the revitalization program.

Rizzo said the meeting would only be one of many held with a variety of groups in town as he and the Task Force attempts to garner support for the program.

"We plan on having meetings with business owners, residents, and town officials," he said. "This won't succeed if it's just the Task Force, just the merchants, just the town officials, or just the residents. The key to any municipal project is that it be community-driven."

Ordelheide also said community support for a village and harbor revitalization effort would be imperative, arguing that residents will be the chief beneficiaries of any improvements in those areas.

"We have to have a base of support from merchants and residents," he said. "Cohasset is never going to be a major tourist center, and it shouldn't be. The people who will enjoy a beautiful downtown and harbor will be the ones who live here every day."

Rizzo hopes the seed money donated by Roy and Ordelheide will spur contributions from other local business owners. He said those funds and the $5,000 appropriated by the town at last month's special town meeting will be used to complete grant proposals for federal and state aid and to complete a study of the current situation in the harbor and village.

The study, which is scheduled to go out to bid in February, will study the current state of parking, traffic patterns, sidewalks, lighting, design, and streetscapes. Rizzo hoped the study and necessary public meetings would be completed by mid-summer.

"The study will produce conceptual drawings, plans for underground utilities, and recommend a program for increased signage and pedestrian access," Rizzo said. "Twenty-five percent design drawings will also be produced, which is the amount specified in some of the grants."

Ultimately, Rizzo said the Task Force hopes for a three-phase improvement in the village.

"First, we'd like to see new infrastructure and streetscape improvements," he said. "Second, put the utility lines underground in the village and harbor, and, third, continue to develop a Harborwalk to link the village and harbor."

Rizzo said the total cost of the project is likely to be $2.5 million, not including underground utilities. He said he has pinpointed grants of $1.75 million to help defray the cost to the town.

Eventually, the town will have to pick up some of the costs of the project. Rizzo said the entire town will benefit if the Task Force's vision becomes reality.

"This will bring a renewed sense of pride and quality in the village and harbor," he said. "There will be a more vibrant atmosphere for everyone."

New police officer recommended

Position will be filled only if town receives a federal grant

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The drug arrests relating to heroin possession and distribution which have been made in Cohasset over the last year may have come as a shock to some, but to police Chief Brian Noonan, they are evidence of the need for an additional officer in his department.

The detective who made the drug arrests was taken from his usual position to work almost solely on such cases, leaving the need for another detective position in the department.

"It's important to leave him in his position working on the drug cases and other investigations," Noonan said of the detective. "But we need a daytime detective, who is responsible for firearms permits, FID cards, and daytime investigations."

Selectman Merle Brown wondered aloud if the department needed both a nighttime and daytime detective.

"It sounds like mostly administrative work," he said of the daytime detective's duties.

While a daytime detective performs some routine tasks, Noonan said the position is one of great responsibility.

"If anything occurs during the day, the daytime detective goes and takes charge," he said. "Bank robberies, accidents, anything."

Town Manager Mark Haddad supported hiring another police officer to increase staffing, but only if the town receives a COPS Universal grant, which would pay 75 percent of a new officer's salary for three years.

"We have three uniformed officers on duty at a minimum. I certainly don't think that's excessive."
Police chief Brian Noonan

"We will only fill the position if we succeed in getting the grant," Haddad said. "The position would cost us $14,000 in FY 2001, though the impact would be $51,000 after three years. The reason I agreed with Brian's [Nonnan's] proposal is that we have kind of an overtime problem in the police department with minimum manning."

The police department currently has 17 uniformed officers, down from 18 in 1980, when the department lost a position due to cuts relating to the onset of Proposition 2 1/2.

Under the contract with the police officers union, all shifts must have a minimum of three uniformed officers on duty. A rash of unexpected injuries incurred in the line of duty has caused police department overtime to increase, which Haddad said an extra officer would help control.

Selectman Tom Callahan said the minimum number of officers may need to be reduced in the future.

"If there's a larger issue here on minimum manning, let's deal with that first before we talk about hiring an additional officer which we might not need," he said.

Noonan disputed Callahan's contention of a need for reducing the minimum number of officers per shift.

"We have three uniformed officers on duty at a minimum," he said. "I certainly don't think that's excessive."

Selectmen eventually recommended adding another police officer position by a vote of 3-1, with Callahan opposed. The vote is contingent upon receiving the federal COPS grant.

"Chief Noonan said we need another officer to keep the town safe," said selectman Diane Sullivan. "That's good enough for me."

Medical building breaks ground on 3A

Crocker Lane site to be home to Dr. Golden's practice

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A new medical building on Route 3A may only be months away.

Construction workers have been busy at the three-story, 36,000 square-foot, medical building near Crocker Lane. The brick exterior of the medical building will match that of the smaller office building in front of it which houses Coastal Countryside Properties.

According to the Environmental Notification Form filed by Dan Aguiar of Sitec, Inc. in New Bedford, the new office building will be served by 216 new parking spaces and is expected to generate 900 vehicular trips a day. The total area of the project is 7.5 acres, 3.5 of which will remain open space.

The site will be served by an existing subsurface sewage disposal system installed on an adjacent property.

Rob Schwandt, advisor to landowner Paul Barry, said the building could be completed by the end of July if the weather allows construction to proceed according to plan.

"The foundation is in, and I'd say we're looking at about six months until the building is complete," Schwandt said.

Schwandt said the top floor of the new medical building will be occupied by Dr. Steven Golden, who currently operates his family practice next to the town parking lot at 12 Parkingway.

Golden, who serves as the president of Healthcare South, was named the 1999 Family Physician of the Year by the Massachusetts Academy of Family Physicians.

Barry said he is in the process of negotiating with other tenants, and hopes the building will be used solely for medical purposes.

"That's how it's anticipated, but we don't have it fully occupied yet," he said.

AROUND TOWN

A SPECIAL DAY

Here is all a little girl dreams of — Tori Litchfield (our granddaughter) celebrated her fourth birthday last week and was she excited!

We held a tea party for her and she wore her big princess crown and waved her wand (magic you know) then TCBY cakes were served as a big part of the gala!

Tori had a wonderful time, as did we all!

DEAN'S LIST

Congrats go to Katie Anderson, daughter of Debbie and Gary Anderson! Katie is a junior at Plymouth State College, studying to be a teacher and she made the dean's list. What a wonderful gal; any child will be lucky to have her as a teacher!

WINTER CONSIGNING

Polly Logan dropped me a note last week telling me to tell all of you that Friday, Jan. 28, will be the final day to consign your winter clothes and to remind you of the super buys you can get there — leather handbags, designer suits for men and women, sweaters by Ralph Lauren (the list goes on and on). Just take a 'sec' and pop in to see what treasure you can find, you will be glad you did!

COMING OF AGE

As reported in Senior Vista News — "Congratulations, if you were born in 1940! Cohasset Elder Affairs extends a very warm welcome to you! Coming of age entitles you to all services available from the Cohasset Board of Elder Affairs and the staff. Please stop in and ask to speak with Carol Barrett — the Outreach Coordinator. If you don't need services, maybe you would enjoy attending some of the wonderful classes or volunteering!"

HISTORIC STEEPLE

Wasn't it amazing to watch the Steeplejack as he and his workers removed the historic steeple from the First Parish Unitarian Church on Cohasset Common?

The steeple had to be removed for repairs (it is more than 250 years old) — hopefully renovations will go smoothly because it certainly does seem strange to see that beautiful church without its steeple!

GET WELL SOON

Hopefully Harry Ritter will be feeling lots better as he reads this!

THREE OF A KIND

Andrew, Anthony and Bobby Nahill, five-year-old triplets from Cohasset, pause during day of snow-tubing at the middle-high school on Sunday.

SECRET SANTA

Hats off to Mary Kay Burnett! Mary Kay and her family recently moved to Cohasset and called the Senior Center to ask if there was anything she could do for all of our seniors (she wanted to do something special)! Well, she was the Secret Santa who provided gifts, and we think that her generosity and kindness should be noted!

There should be more people like you in our lives, Mary Kay!

BON VOYAGE

We bid a fond farewell to Margaux Yeager as she heads off to Europe for a spell — now Margaux going off to college was one thing, but we really will miss you and your wonderful, bubbly personality around our neighborhood! Have a great time!

GRIDIRON STARS

We have forgotten to mention the fact that Cohasset High School has some star athletes who were honored for their prowess in football — we give a standing ovation to Jason Brown, Daniel Trower and Craig Parker, who were honored by WATD recently (in December). You three men were awesome last season!

SUPPORT SPORTS

Speaking of sports, don't forget to say hello to our athletes by attending a game! They work hard to win. They love to hear you give a shout to them and they all want you to attend their games! There is an event out there for everyone to enjoy!

FOOD PANTRY

A gentle reminder — don't forget our Food Pantry! It is located at the Second Congregational Church, helps at least 15 households and it is very easy to be of assistance — the items that are always needed the most are laundry detergent, dishwashing liquid, coffee, Kleenex and canned fruit — of course, anything is very much appreciated — just "double-up" when you shop for your favorite thing. Leave one off, then you will make both yourself and someone else very happy!

The news is a little sparse this week! That's because not many of you have called me with your latest happenings! Please do!

Chicken pie that melts in your mouth

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

Oh my, is it cold! And the dreaded snow is here! The only good part, you are "locked" in the house and can spend the time inside cooking.

I don't know about you and your family, but we love "comfort food" during this time!

Most people get very sentimental when they have a nice chicken pie, one that "melts in your mouth" variety.

Well this is my favorite: give it a try!

CHICKEN PIE

1 (about 3-1/2 pounds) roasting chicken
1/2 cup butter
1 slice bacon
1/2 pound Italian sweet sausage sliced
1/2 pound lamb kidneys quartered and fat removed
1 onion peeled
1 carrot pared and quartered
2 stalks celery with leaves
2 parsley sprigs
1 bay leaf
1/4 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
1-1/4 teaspoons salt
1/4 teaspoons pepper
1-1/2 cups finely chopped carrot
2 cups finely chopped onion
1/2 teaspoon sugar
3 pounds tomatoes peeled and chopped
1/2 cup dry sherry
1/4 cup dry white wine
3 tablespoons flour
1 package (9-1/2 ounces) piecrust mix
1 egg yolk

Brown chicken in 4-quart Dutch oven in 1/4 cup butter When chicken is brown all over, remove and set aside. In same Dutch oven brown chicken neck, hearts and liver along with bacon, sausage and kidneys, stirring occasionally — takes about 10 minutes

Set chicken on top of bacon mixture: add whole onion, quartered carrot, the celery, parsley, bay leaf, thyme, 1/2 teaspoon salt, pepper and 1 cup water. Bring to boiling; reduce heat and simmer covered 45 mins.

Meanwhile in 1/4 cup hot butter sauté chopped carrot and onion with sugar (30 mins.) Add pepper, tomato, 1/4 cup sherry and dry wine Bring to boil, then reduce heat and simmer covered 10 minutes.

Combine flour and remaining sherry; mix well, stir well — add to tomato mixture, bring to boil til mix thickens, then remove — lift chicken with sausage, bacon and kidneys into a 3-qt. oval casserole Pour hot tomato sauce over all.

Preheat oven to 400. Make pie crust, arrange over chicken (be sure to make a few slits to vent).

In small bowl, mix egg yolk with 1 tbsp. cold water to brush over pastry.

Bake 20-25 mins., til crust is golden brown. Four to six servings.

Hingham man scores on 'Jeopardy' TV show

Cohasset in-laws are big fans

By Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITER

Hingham resident Frank Butterworth's knack for remembering bits of trivia over the years paid off recently in a big way.

Last week his family and friends saw him on tape — walking away from the quiz show "Jeopardy" with $19,000 in cash and a digital camera.

Butterworth has been a fan of the popular show for a long time. That's why his wife, Susan Chase, encouraged him to make an appearance on the game show.

"I know lots of trivia and otherwise useless things," he said with a laugh.

Consequently, he mailed off a "contestant search" postcard a couple of years ago, hoping that would lead to an appearance on "Jeopardy."

While that avenue didn't pay off, another opportunity arose early last year when the show — which he happened to be viewing from a Los Vegas hotel room — announced its producers were looking for contestants from the Washington, DC area — where Butterworth was living at the time.

His decision to register as a possible participant on the show's web site proved fruitful, because last May he was asked to take a test of 50 videotaped questions to see if he qualified.

"Questions were fired at us — it seemed like every five or six seconds," Butterworth recalls.

Those who did well on the test had a practice read using flash cards with questions printed on them. Then they were asked to provide a monologue about themselves as well as detail what they would do if they won a lot of money on "Jeopardy."

"They also took a Polaroid photograph of us and said we might hear from them again," said Butterworth, who moved to Hingham in June. Chase is originally from Hingham, and her parents, Maryann and David Chase, have lived on Pond Street in Cohasset for 20 years.

Fortunately he passed with flying colors, receiving a letter in September asking him to fly out to Los Angeles in November to tape shows which would air in January.

Butterworth eagerly accepted the offer, flying to Los Angeles the night before the taping, toting a couple of changes of clothes in case he won and went on to be a contestant in the next show. Five shows are taped a day.

The enthusiastic Butterworth won two shows and was thrilled with the camera and prize money, which he intends to use to help pay for renovations to his Lantern Lane home as well as take his wife on a trip to "somewhere warm."

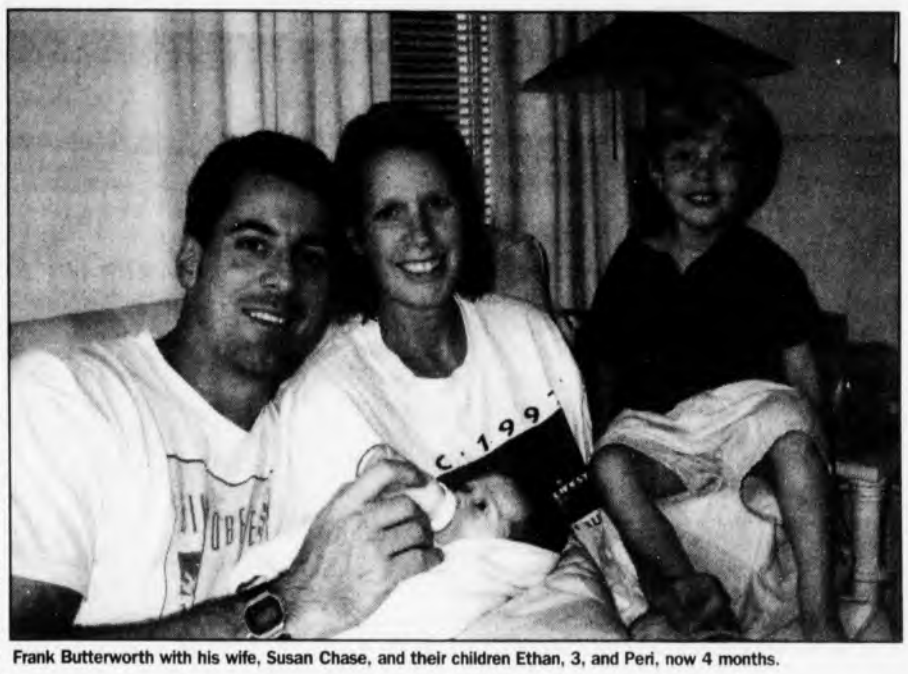
"The money certainly will come in handy," he said.

Butterworth's wife, along with his two children — Ethan, 3, and Peri, 4 months — are proud of him.

"It was very exciting to watch the show with Frank and my mother and father," she said.

On the third day, Butterworth and his family watched "Jeopardy" with some longtime friends, who thoroughly enjoyed the show, as did the contestant himself, who thought it was a "different" experience to see himself on television.

"I knew Frank was on 'Jeopardy' for three days and what he had won, but other than that I didn't ask what happened, because I wanted to be surprised," Chase said. "It was a nice person he (eventually) lost to."



Frank Butterworth with his wife, Susan Chase, and their children Ethan, 3, and Peri, now 4 months.

Frank Butterworth eagerly accepted the offer, flying to Los Angeles the night before the taping, toting a couple of changes of clothes in case he won and went on to be a contestant in the next show. Five shows are taped a day.

Her mother and father already enjoyed watching "Jeopardy," but they're even bigger fans now that their son-in-law appeared on the show.

"We're always shouting out the answers. I'm so excited if I get five or six correct," said Maryann Chase. "We always wondered who the people on the show are and where they come from — now we know! I admire the contestants' ability to work under tension and hit the answer button at the same time. I don't know how they do it."

What did Butterworth enjoy most about being a contestant?

"It was great just seeing how the show was put together, but to actually win was kind of fun," said Butterworth. "My friends would never have let me hear the end of it if I didn't!"

How does an individual prepare for such a challenge?

"I took a couple of months to get ready for the show," said Butterworth.

Contestants don't receive hints of any kind as to what kinds of questions might be asked.

"Anyone who watches 'Jeopardy' knows there's a huge variety of topics," he said.

So Butterworth made a list of subjects he thought might be addressed and solicited "tutors" among his family and friends to help him prepare.

When that effort petered out after a couple of weeks, Butterworth turned to the "New York Public Library Desk Reference," which contains a wide selection of general information on a number of subjects, including art, writers and history.

He studied it conscientiously on the commuter boat on his way to and from work.

"I did a lot of reading, but in hindsight, there was only one question from the book during the time I was a contestant," recalls Butterworth. "It's virtually impossible to prepare unless you have a huge amount of time to go through subject indexes."

In the end, Butterworth attributes his win to the "compendium of knowledge amassed over a lifetime."

"If you can recall what you've learned and piece things together, you're okay," he said.

The biggest surprise came when Butterworth scored well in categories he didn't know much about — such as "leading ladies."

"I'm not much of a film buff," he said.

On the other hand, the topics he was most familiar and comfortable with — math and science — never came up during his stint on the show.

For example, the topic of subatomic particles had been included on "Jeopardy" the week before his shows were taped, but to his dismay was not addressed while he was a contestant.

Before leaving for the taping, his wife offered him two specific tidbits of information she thought might be useful, including the fact that the Washington Post's publishers include Katharine Graham.

Ironically, that information appeared in a question during Butterworth's appearance on the show.

"But I couldn't remember her name!" he said with a chuckle.

Butterworth found the show's host, Alex Trebek, a personable guy.

"He was a little no-nonsense, but that's understandable considering he tapes five shows a day, has to change his clothes for each one as well as bone up on the questions," he said.

Some of the categories Butterworth faced during his appearance were "Ports of the World," including both seaports and port wine; "20th-century Women"; "Opera"; "Bumped form the Cover of Time"; and "Writers by Middle Name."

He did especially well in the last category, coming up with three correct answers in a row — F. Scott Fitzgerald and poets William Carlos Williams and Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

"During the show itself, you miss a lot of what's going on because it goes so quickly and you're focused on doing well," Butterworth said.

But the excitement hits home once the taping is finished.

What does he think about other game shows, such as "How to Become a Millionaire"?

"Those kinds of shows make 'Jeopardy' seem like chump change," said Butterworth.

In fact, Jay Leno referred to the Hingham resident and his fellow contestant on "The Tonight Show" recently.

"He talked about two guys who were 'slugging it out' and only ended up with $13,000 each at the end, while on the other show, a contestant can walk away with $500,000 for knowing Smurfs are blue!"

While in Los Angeles, Butterworth met several contestants from around the country, including the Boston area. In fact, he attended a "Jeopardy" party in Boston on Tuesday in honor of a Boston-area woman who was also a winner.

While in California, a number of contestants went out to dinner together after the taping.

When they were trying to decide how to divide the cab fare, Butterworth chimed out, "Hey, I'm the one who won $19,000. I should pay for it!"

OPINION

Run for office

It's the year 2000 — more than 230 years since the town was incorporated — and Cohasset needs enthusiastic people interested in serving in local government more than ever.

Like many others, our town is facing the pressures of growth, increased traffic, infrastructure upgrades and budgetary challenges on both the town and school sides of government.

But what we think separates us from a lot of communities are the talent and expertise that our residents have to share. Over the years, that has kept Cohasset unique more than any other single factor.

So it's time for some new citizens to step up to the plate and throw their hats into the ring for an elected seat in local government.

Adding to the excitement this year are the open seats on the board of selectmen and school committee. Selectman Diane Sullivan and school committee member Betsy Connolly have decided not to seek reelection to their respective boards.

Faced with the school building projects and budgetary challenges under education reform, the school committee in particular is facing challenging times. Being a parent is not a requirement. All that's needed is an open mind, commitment and a good dose of courage.

We hope prospective candidates won't be deterred from running even if they have to challenge an incumbent. Contested races keep the election interesting and are the best way for issues to be aired.

The last day to obtain nomination papers at the town clerk's office is Feb. 17.

Pay as You Throw

Whoever said "what goes around, comes around" — must have stopped off in Cohasset.

Pay as You Throw — a disposal system that encourages recycling by charging $1 per trash bag — is surfacing again and could be put before voters at the annual town meeting.

The concept was first floated back in 1997, then after some opposition, it was shelved for a year while an education campaign on the merits of the plan was conducted. However, voters at the annual town meeting in 1998 remained unconvinced and rejected the plan.

But in the world of recycling two years is a long time.

We think the town might be ready to accept PAYT this time around. After all, it's working well in Scituate where recycling is way up.

As Selectman Tom Callahan says, "It's shown to increase recycling and decrease the amount shipped to SEMASS. I don't know what the big deal is in trying it."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Stop the train

TO THE EDITOR:

The New Year 2000 should give us the promise of newness — all things bright and beautiful. But, dear citizens of Hingham and surrounding towns, what we will get is darkness and particulates, noise and a decrease in personal safety.

Selectmen — you cannot cave in to the MBTA. They do not care if our town is destroyed environmentally, socially and historically. They do not live here, but we do.

Gov. Cellucci speaks with a forked tongue. On the one hand he thinks it is a green light for Greenbush, in the next breath he states "Balancing growth with the need to maintain "unique character" of the area's communities is the other big issue for the South Shore" — quoted from the Dec. 31 Patriot Ledger. And Hingham is unique — our town would have more grade crossings in a short distance than any other towns in the Greenbush corridor. Governor, you can not do this by running a heavy diesel through Hingham. Has the Governor walked the mile through Hingham along the tracks? Has he reached out to touch the buildings? What a legacy Gov. Cellucci would leave us — "Lovely small town USA est. c. 1600s destroyed." There is no mitigation possible in this physical set up.

The price of the tunnel dropped because the tunnel was shortened compromising the safety and the welfare of the town. Why does the state pursue the avenue of at grade level crossings with high speed diesels when the federal government is trying to eliminate these? A short tunnel of 800 feet leaves 11 crossings close together — all gates and whistles would have to go at once for safety. Why is the MBTA so callous to a town that has been here much longer than the train? I have been told that I may be a NIMBY. Well, I am not, because the train would not only be in Hingham's backyard, but also in their kitchens, dining rooms and bedrooms, and their front yards because the town is small and the crossings close together, and the train is big and noisy, dangerous and polluting.

We are in Buck Rodger's 21st century, and despite the technology, we may as well be back with Conestoga wagons for transportation.

Mitigate by pursuing the other avenues that have been proven successful by towns and cities. If Hingham is destroyed, we leave a sorry legacy for our grandchildren. Rally round, citizens, before you rue the day.

Rep. Murray will be missed

TO THE EDITOR:

I read with great disappointment last week Rep. Mary Janette Murray's decision to step down from the job that she has dutifully held for the past 24 years.

During the fall of 1997 I had the opportunity to intern for Rep. Murray part-time and found it to be an unforgettable experience. I looked forward to each Friday afternoon when I would head over to her office in the State House so that she could delegate tasks for me to do. Her easy-going demeanor, tremendous sense of humor, and charm made her beloved by all those she worked with. Whenever I was given an errand to run for her to the office of another representative, I received a smile almost instantaneously as soon as I identified myself as being from her office and was always charged with the task of telling the representative that he or she sends their best.

It was, however, her compassion toward those who needed her, that left a lasting impression on me. Whenever a constituent called, she would carefully look into their problem and assist them with whatever help she could possibly provide. She took such great pride in helping those who needed her most, earning a reputation as someone who would never turn away from anyone who asked for her help. I remember on many occasions receiving phone calls from veterans or senior citizens who did not even live in her district and had solely heard through others that she could assist them with their problems. Her dedication to the people she represented was unmatched by any of her colleagues.

In a political environment that is at times contrite and egotistical, she was a fixture of modesty and longevity. She is the last of a generation of State House politicians who always placed the needs of those they serve before their own.

QUESTIONS

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no important roll calls in the House or Senate last week. This week, BHRC records local representatives' final roll call attendance records for the entire 1999 session.

The House held 302 roll calls during the 1999 session. BHRC tabulates the number of roll calls on which each representative was present and voting and then calculates that number as a percentage of the total roll call votes held. That percentage is the number commonly referred to as the roll call attendance record.

LOCAL REPRESENTATIVES' ATTENDANCE RECORDS The percent listed next to each representative's name is the percentage of roll calls for which the representative was present and voting. The number in parentheses indicates the number of roll calls he missed.

Where Little Harbor pollution comes from

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Camp Dresser Mckee (CDM); the town's contractor for the Little Harbor Water Quality Study has submitted its report. The findings state that all of Little Harbor is substantially free from point sources of pollution such as direct discharges of sewage from septic systems, and that, except for infrequent storm events the water is clean enough for swimming. Moreover during dry season sampling, most of the bacteria counts are low enough to warrant opening of shellfish beds.

The problems with some of the water in Little Harbor arise from nutrients such as nitrogen and phosphorous which permit the growth of algae. In spring, algae blooms are common near Bow Street, the Caravels, and in Inner Little Harbor above Cat Dam. These algae blooms remove oxygen from the water which is needed by aquatic animals in the water. The spring algae blooms are particularly hard on juvenile shellfish, and there are reports that clam beds on the flats of Little Harbor now contain few clams in spite of the fact that they have been closed since 1984.

Another source of nutrients is from septic systems. While properly operating septic systems don't contribute harmful bacteria to the water, they are a source of nitrogen and phosphorous, the primary nutrients contributing to algae growth. The CDM report states that about 70 percent of the nutrients going into Inner Little Harbor come from septic systems. This figure will be reduced substantially when sewering is completed at Linden Drive and Rustic Way, which, despite their distance from Little Harbor are in the watershed, contributing water to Richardson's Brook on Holly Hill Farm. The contribution from septic systems to the main body of Little Harbor below the dam is 40 percent. The balance comes from lawn fertilizer. The Town is planning a campaign, hopefully, with help from the state, to educate citizens about the use of fertilizer and pesticides and the harm that they cause to our water resources.

Carrots and Your Eyes??

Taken from an article from the Mindspring Enterprises WebPages

Q: Can eating carrots really improve your eyesight?

A: If Mom always said, "Eat your carrots, they'll help your eyes," she had a point. Eating carrots does provide benefits to your eyes, experts say.

It's all thanks to beta-carotene, "an orange pigment found in carrots and other plants," says Dr. Timothy Tobolic, a family practitioner in Byron Center, Mich. "When you eat carrots, the b-carotene is transformed into retinol or vitamin-A. Vitamin A is necessary for the retina of the eye to function properly."

The retina, says Phillip J. Calenda, an ophthalmologist with the Tarboro Eye Clinic in Tarboro, N.C., is the light-sensing part of the eye that holds the rods and cones, which contain enzymes that absorb light and allow us to see.

"The rods provide black and white vision and respond in dim light while the cones provide color vision and respond to bright light," Dr. Tobolic says. "Vitamin A helps the retina tell black from white and provides for color vision. It also helps us see in dim light or at night. When you go into a darkened theater after being out in the bright light, your eyes are able to adapt because of the vitamin A that you have stored in your body."

It's possible that even very serious eye conditions might have a connection to carrots and other things you eat, though it remains difficult to truly determine if this kind of association is valid. If proven, it could then be a factor, for example, in the case of macular degeneration, an age-related eye disease and the leading cause of blindness in older Americans.

"With the progressive graying of our population and the increased level of 'pro-activeness' as it relates to health-care issues, macular degeneration and the effects of dietary modification are becoming common topics in the ophthalmologist's office," says Dr. Tom S. Chang, an associate professor of ophthalmology at the Doheny Eye Institute in Los Angeles, Calif. A couple of the new trendy substances that may help reduce the progression of macular degeneration are leitean and zeaxanthime.

But for now listen to Mom and eat those carrots!

COHASSET CARES

A P.A.Y.T. [Pay-as-you-throw] story

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Here' s a story I hope you find interesting because it really happened: I'll admit my first reaction to PAYT [Pay-as-you-throw] was negative — and I'm a lifelong environmentalist. My reaction shows that even eco-fanatics need to be educated on this issue, leave alone people on the environmental fence. My reaction shows why a handful of voters remaining at a late meeting last year instinctively panicked without the facts and defeated the issue — but, interestingly enough, by only a slim margin.

I guess my eco-roots go back to my parents' mix of farming and education, one a math teacher and the other a science teacher, back to my being brought up in the Depression and during World War II when things were scarce, when things had value, when everything counted. Composting was a natural and necessary part of vegetable gardening. We kids scrounged bits of aluminum foil from cigarette packages found in the gutter for the war effort. I waited in line with the family's ration card and tokens for sugar, white oleo, and so on. We had to sell the car because we couldn't get enough gas. And then behind it all was my Scottish ancestry! So while I was not brought up to participate in the great American right to throw away anything any time I wanted, anywhere I wanted — that was from other eras before and after the War — I was brought up to pinch pennies.

Pay to throw away trash? Let's take another look at that!

* * * * *

While it could be said that just about everything I have written in this column over the months supports the concept of PAYT, it does not take numerous articles, it does not take a lot of study, to convince someone to go with PAYT. I am tempted to say that if anything I have written in my articles makes sense, then PAYT makes sense. My initial negative reaction was a non-thinking gut reaction; off the cuff it didn't make sense to have to pay to throw something away. Most of us are guilty, at times, of making quick, uninformed decisions. This PAYT thing is an issue that requires just a bit of hard thought/common sense. Like me, you might have a little prejudice to work through.

What has happened is that people younger than I and without so much stubborn Scottish blood have realized that PAYT simply makes sense. The facts are that PAYT works — environmentally and economically. PAYT encourages waste prevention and recycling, but it's also cheaper than other waste disposal systems in the long run. Fascinating, isn't it? You get off your duff, recycle your stuff, and you end up paying less for your waste disposal services. Obviously PAYT is enthusiastically promoted by the EPA. PAYT is taking hold everywhere as the only and best way to go.

Speaking of which, I have to go. To be continued! In the meantime, try to talk to someone from Scituate. They just adopted PAYT a few months ago. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

The first word that comes to mind when I think of January is COLD, though as I put the finishing touches on this essay, the mercury has climbed to 64 degrees, a new local record.

Surely they won't last — or will they? — these days on loan from April, and by the time my ramblings make it to newsprint next week we will, no doubt, be shivering, slip-sliding, maybe even digging out.

January comes to us from Janus, the Roman deity of doorways and beginnings. It is the month of resolutions and fresh starts and also the month that marks the depth of the natural year. The land is dormant, the nights long, the days too short. It is the month whose full moon was known to Native Americans as the Wolf or Hunger Moon, named for the starving, marauding packs. On average, we'll have a foot of snow this month and a low temperature of 22 degrees, but add just a bite of winter wind, a wind that cuts to the bone, and the world outside seems to plunge below zero.

I hate the cold, but without it none of the fragile, transient beauty of ice and snow can be created. Nor would we, without the cold, have reason to slow down and consider the world around us and our place in it. Perhaps more than any other season, winter reconnects us to our elemental beginnings. Water, the wellspring of life is, in its various forms, the embodiment of winter.

Things start happening, of course, once the mercury dips below 32 degrees. Water that has seeped into the earth begins to freeze, heaving and pocking the land. Evanescent breath ghosts dance away from our lips. Icicles grow, droplet by droplet, from the eaves, and fern-like and feathery frosts etch window panes. A shimmering glaze of brittle ice forms on ponds, a memory of the blocks of glacial ice from which the ponds were born.

If it stays cold, the glaze thickens to a cover as black as the deepest winter night or as milky as January's high-riding frosty moon. Now is our chance to walk on water and if the ice is glassy and transparent, the experience of standing on what seems like nothingness is both viscerally exciting and disturbing. The freeze has locked away leaves, sundry bits of vegetation and artistically arranged gas bubbles, all preserved until the thaw.

As it solidifies, the pond's water swells, pushing against the stalwart shore. Something's got to give and when the stresses become unbearable the pond, as though alive, begins to voice primal sounds of its agony, booming and groaning, whining, creaking and cracking.

Meanwhile, overhead in the troposphere, ice crystals form around dust and other tiny impurities. Much of what we know about ice crystals we owe to a passionate 19th century Vermont farmer named Wilson Bentley who dedicated his life to photographing ice crystals, what we commonly call snow. Working in an open-air woodshed and using a microscope coupled to a camera, the self-taught Mr. Bentley, fondly known as "Snowflake" Bentley, gave us the first magnified look at the elegance of ice crystals in 1885. After making some 6,000 photomicrographs on glass lantern slides, he concluded that no two snow crystals are alike, at least he never found two alike. Nothing in nature prevents two snow crystals from being identical, but given the sheer number of crystals that fall and the number of water molecules that come together in each crystal, finding two exactly alike is probably unlikely.

Snowflakes, Thoreau's "wheels of the storm-chariots," are really many ice crystals, as many as several hundred, stuck together. Most crystals have six sides — a number of wholeness, perfection and tranquility — and fall into several general categories, depending on the temperature and moisture of the air: star, plate, needle, column, capped column, spatial dendrite and irregular. Though transparent, they appear white because of the way light is reflected. Bits of algae that grow in snow can also give ice crystals a pink, yellow, green or bluish cast.

Snow changes constantly as it falls to earth, arriving in flakes that are big, wet and heavy or, if the air is below freezing all the way down, dry and fluffy. By the time snow settles gently into our backyards, the startlingly beautiful crystalline structure, so delicate that it can touch down on our lashes without our knowing, is lost forever. Because of this change in a snowflake's form, scientists make a distinction between falling snow and ground snow which is granular and rounded.

Photomicrographs of a snow crystal by Wilson Bentley, The Bentley Archives.

Once on the ground, snow is the earth's blanket, holding in the heat from the land, protecting vegetation from severe cold and in spring, providing us with life-sustaining fresh water. Snowflakes are 90 percent air (the rule of thumb is 10 inches of snow to one inch of water), making them excellent insulators and mufflers of sound. Which is why the snowy January landscape is so still and so quiet.

Snow transforms the landscape, even the contours of our own familiar backyard. And it transforms us, turning us into sculptors, our backyards into gardens of angels and igloos and snowpeople. It makes us kids again as we stalk one another with snowballs, launch ourselves down hills on vinyl tubes and chase flakes with outstretched tongues.

Though we can be blinded by snow's brilliance, it also opens our eyes to things we might not otherwise notice. Against the seamless white we see a tree's complex system of veins and arteries. We better appreciate the cardinal's red, the jay's blue, the stark black and white of the downy, he with his own bit of red. Animal and bird prints in the new-fallen snow are an invitation to follow, to read the story they tell of travel and survival.

But even more inviting is untracked, pathless snow, snow that silences your own existence, let's you lose your way and yourself, snow that tells you you're the first one to smell its heaven-sent freshness, the only one who'll see the evergreen branches unload their burden (as we all must now and then) and be soothed by their whisperings, the only one to see how nature purified, simplified and resculpted the world.

It's not for everyone, winter. Too little sunshine and too much confinement and isolation can make us just as hungry and as crazy as the wolves. The only antidote I've found to winter's assault on our well-being is to embrace, as Thoreau did, the friendliness in nature. "I cannot conceive of any life," he wrote, "which deserves the name, unless there is a certain tender relation to nature. This it is which makes winter warm, and supplies society in the desert and wilderness."

Wrestlers prepare for tourney

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Torin Sweeney admits he'd like to have seen the Cohasset High wrestling team on the sweet side of .500 at this point in the season, a mark that was very much within reach.

If not for a pair of one-point losses and a tie, the Skippers would already be there. But at 5-7-1, Sweeney is hardly concerned. Cohasset is in prime position to make a second half, momentum-gaining run to the Division 3 South Sectional meet.

Cohasset scored a big 48-33 victory over Rockland High last Wednesday on the strength of eight pins, two of which loomed large in the Skippers' South Shore League decision.

Pat Carbone registered a win in the 135-pound match and Brian Litchfield dropped his opponent at 145 pounds to clinch the Cohasset victory and put the team at 1-0 in the SSL standings.

Heavyweight John Hussey's win marked his first by pin this season to cap a satisfying victory against a very good Bulldog team.

"We pinned in some of the matches that could have been close," said Sweeney in summing up the key to the Skippers' fifth win of the season. "The young kids have been wrestling well. We're right there at that .500 level. We want to get there and rise above it."

"The young kids have been wrestling well. We're right there at that .500 level. We want to get there and rise above it."
- coach Torin Sweeney.

One could argue the large turnout of freshman wrestlers, through no fault of their own, has made the difference in Cohasset still lingering under the .500 mark.

With so many young wrestlers on this winter's team, Sweeney has had to emphasize the basic skills during practice than in past years when the Skippers featured a mainly veteran roster. Inevitably it takes longer for the freshmen to become comfortable with those skills.

In years past, Sweeney would be hammering in the oppositions' tendencies in the days leading to meets, thus forming a "game plan." Sweeney heads into every meet with a game plan intact, the difference being he hasn't been able to work on it with the team as much as he'd like.

Sweeney, though, has coached long enough to know the huge importance of preparing his younger wrestlers and getting them comfortable with those basic skills through constant repetition. If, after all, they can't master the basics, what chance would the Skippers have in any of their meets?

"We've basically been experienced for the last nine years," said Sweeney. "We are making strides."

A recent quad meet against New Bedford, Sharon and Duxbury resulted in one win for Cohasset and an extremely frustrating one-

Skippers look to upset Hanover

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys basketball team knew it was in a must-win situation when Abington came to town Tuesday night for a South Shore League contest.

That's why coach Ron Ford's outlook was a little grim after his team dropped a heart-breaking 53-48 decision at home.

"We fell behind early," said Ford. "We were down 8-2, and we came back to pull within two or even tie the game several times, but we just couldn't get over the hump."

"Anything can happen in this league. Hull proved that when they beat Norton. The kids just have to have faith and really get after it. I think you'll see some upsets when teams meet for the second time."
- Coach Ron Ford

The Skippers did not have much of a home-crowd advantage.

"The game got changed to 5 p.m. because Abington has exams this week," said Ford. "We tried to get the word out, but I guess a lot of people didn't hear about it."

The Skippers would have preferred to open up the game and have it be a little high scoring, but Abington was having none of that.

"They played a 2-3 zone, and they were really able to slow down the game," said Ford.

Senior center Khalil Madyun had 19 points to lead the Skippers.

"He had his best game of the year so far," said Ford.

Cohasset had a chance to win it coming down the stretch.

"We cut it down to two with about 10 seconds left to get within reach, but then they hit their foul shots to put themselves out of it," said Ford. "The guys didn't quit though. They kept fighting back."

The Skippers will be in action tomorrow night when they travel to Hanover. Earlier in the season, Cohasset had trouble keeping possession of the ball and lost 73-48 to the Indians.

"We were completely overmatched in that game," said Ford. "We can play better than we did in that game. We've played at or just below our level of competition. Cardinal Spellman is undefeated and ranked in the top 10 in the state, and we gave them a good game. We just ran out of steam, which was too bad because we had them."

The loss dropped the Skippers to 3-7 overall and 1-5 in the South Shore League. They really needed a win over the Green Wave to help their quest for the tournament, yet the season is far from over.

"The kids have been working hard," said Ford. "They're all great kids. We've been playing pretty good basketball. The coaches are

Girls hoop starting to come around

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"The girls on this team are enthusiastic, working hard, optimistic, and they are really starting to mesh nicely as a team," said first year coach Ellen Carr of her junior varsity basketball team when asked about the progress of her squad.

"I am very optimistic about the future of this program, I think we can put together some good varsity teams in the next few years."
- Coach Ellen Carr

The improvements made over the course of this year are astounding, considering how there was a possibility there would not even be a team for lack of participants. As of now, the team roster stands at eight names, four of them freshmen.

This season was originally meant to be a transition year to get the girls varsity program up and running again. However, at 4-4, they have exceeded many expectations.

"I am very optimistic about the future of this program," Carr said. "We only have one junior, Katie [Wenmark], and no seniors, but I think we can put together some good varsity teams in the next few years."

What Cohasset lacks in numbers, it makes up for in hard work and discipline.

"[This team] is beginning to move away from what I call 'instant basketball' and really seeing the merit in strategy and set plays," Carr observed.

"They are a great bunch of kids who really listen," added Carr's eight year old daughter/"coaching assistant," Audrey.

One of the things Skipper fans can look forward to will be the players that are going to carry over from the Middle School. Eighth grade center Danielle Pinkus has led her team with 15 points per game to an undefeated record.

The Lady Skippers defeated Hull last Tuesday 62-46. Freshmen shooting guard Heather Peraino and co-captain Maura O'Brien scored 22 and 16 points respectively. Freshman point guard LaRaine Langford paced the offense, dishing out six assists.

The next game Cohasset played was a loss to Dover, 52-34. Freshman Lindsay Grossman scored 15, while O'Brien and Langford also figured into the offensive mix with 10 points apiece.

"They really are becoming a team in every sense of the word," Carr said with a smile. "No girl is selfish and they really help motivate one another."

With the record standing at 4-4, and winnable games coming up in Notre Dame, Hanover and Abington, a plus .500 season could be on the horizon for this blossoming team.

"That is definitely a goal we are shooting for," said Carr. "If we can [finish the season with more wins than losses] we might be moved up to varsity as soon as next year. But still, another year at the JV level couldn't hurt."

Though very small in numbers, and young in age, Carr believes that they play with as much intensity as anyone.

Carr summed it up: "You can call us varsity, junior varsity, whatever. We just call ourselves Cohasset Girls Basketball."

Register for youth lacrosse on Jan. 29

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, which this spring will expand to field a team of third- and fourth-graders, will hold its sign-up for the spring season Saturday, Jan. 29, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

Registrations will be taken for the 14 and Under program (7th- and 8th-graders), the 12 and under program (5th- and 6th-graders) and the new 10 and Under team.

One significant change for the spring of 2000 is that there will be just one Under-12 team. There have been two teams in each of the last two years. As a result, the number of roster spots will be limited; registrations will be taken on a first-come first-served basis, and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

The on-time registration fee is $80, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids. Late registrations, if roster spots are available, are $100.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 and Under level, a player can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School team.

Cohasset's junior lacrosse program is a member of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices for kids in fifth grade and up are scheduled for Monday and Friday afternoons; the Under-10 team's practice and game schedule is still being finalized. The teams will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

While the schedule should minimize conflicts, problems do sometimes arise. This year, because some interested players could be turned away due to limited roster spots, the lacrosse program is asking parents to sort out potential conflicts before enrolling their children.

"We work hard to avoid and understand conflicts," Chuck Jaffe, head coach, says, "but we need for parents to respect the limits on our roster. The occasional hockey or baseball game is one thing, but if a child wants to participate in a play — and will miss a month of the season to prepare for that play — they have made their choice and should leave the roster spot open for someone else who wants to put lacrosse first and would show up every day."

Bob Inman assists Jaffe on the 12 and Under level; Jaffe expects to run the 14 and Under program this year too, with assistance from Jim Murphy. The coaching situation for the new 10 and Under team is not yet clear.

The program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at the older levels — and on a limited basis with the new team — practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick.

Jaffe also notes that the Cohasset program welcomes girls, but that it does not play girls lacrosse, which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment.

"Many girls play in the MBYLL," he says, 'but there are adjustments to make when they get older and start playing girls lacrosse."

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan. 29 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

Wrestlers prepare for tourney

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Torin Sweeney admits he'd like to have seen the Cohasset High wrestling team on the sweet side of .500 at this point in the season, a mark that was very much within reach.

If not for a pair of one-point losses and a tie, the Skippers would already be there. But at 5-7-1, Sweeney is hardly concerned. Cohasset is in prime position to make a second half, momentum-gaining run to the Division 3 South Sectional meet.

Cohasset scored a big 48-33 victory over Rockland High last Wednesday on the strength of eight pins, two of which loomed large in the Skippers' South Shore League decision.

Pat Carbone registered a win in the 135-pound match and Brian Litchfield dropped his opponent at 145 pounds to clinch the Cohasset victory and put the team at 1-0 in the SSL standings.

Heavyweight John Hussey's win marked his first by pin this season to cap a satisfying victory against a very good Bulldog team.

"We pinned in some of the matches that could have been close," said Sweeney in summing up the key to the Skippers' fifth win of the season. "The young kids have been wrestling well. We're right there at that .500 level. We want to get there and rise above it."

"The young kids have been wrestling well. We're right there at that .500 level. We want to get there and rise above it."
- coach Torin Sweeney.

One could argue the large turnout of freshman wrestlers, through no fault of their own, has made the difference in Cohasset still lingering under the .500 mark.

With so many young wrestlers on this winter's team, Sweeney has had to emphasize the basic skills during practice than in past years when the Skippers featured a mainly veteran roster. Inevitably it takes longer for the freshmen to become comfortable with those skills.

In years past, Sweeney would be hammering in the oppositions' tendencies in the days leading to meets, thus forming a "game plan." Sweeney heads into every meet with a game plan intact, the difference being he hasn't been able to work on it with the team as much as he'd like.

Sweeney, though, has coached long enough to know the huge importance of preparing his younger wrestlers and getting them comfortable with those basic skills through constant repetition. If, after all, they can't master the basics, what chance would the Skippers have in any of their meets?

"We've basically been experienced for the last nine years," said Sweeney. "We are making strides."

A recent quad meet against New Bedford, Sharon and Duxbury resulted in one win for Cohasset and an extremely frustrating one-

Skippers look to upset Hanover

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys basketball team knew it was in a must-win situation when Abington came to town Tuesday night for a South Shore League contest.

That's why coach Ron Ford's outlook was a little grim after his team dropped a heart-breaking 53-48 decision at home.

"We fell behind early," said Ford. "We were down 8-2, and we came back to pull within two or even tie the game several times, but we just couldn't get over the hump."

The Skippers did not have much of a home-crowd advantage.

"The game got changed to 5 p.m. because Abington has exams this week," said Ford. "We tried to get the word out, but I guess a lot of people didn't hear about it."

The Skippers would have preferred to open up the game and have it be a little high scoring, but Abington was having none of that.

"They played a 2-3 zone, and they were really able to slow down the game," said Ford.

Senior center Khalil Madyun had 19 points to lead the Skippers.

"He had his best game of the year so far," said Ford.

Cohasset had a chance to win it coming down the stretch.

"We cut it down to two with about 10 seconds left to get within reach, but then they hit their foul shots to put themselves out of it," said Ford. "The guys didn't quit though. They kept fighting back."

The Skippers will be in action tomorrow night when they travel to Hanover. Earlier in the season, Cohasset had trouble keeping possession of the ball and lost 73-48 to the Indians.

"Anything can happen in this league. Hull proved that when they beat Norton. The kids just have to have faith and really get after it. I think you'll see some upsets when teams meet for the second time."
- Coach Ron Ford

"We were completely overmatched in that game," said Ford. "We can play better than we did in that game. We've played at or just below our level of competition. Cardinal Spellman is undefeated and ranked in the top 10 in the state, and we gave them a good game. We just ran out of steam, which was too bad because we had them."

The loss dropped the Skippers to 3-7 overall and 1-5 in the South Shore League. They really needed a win over the Green Wave to help their quest for the tournament, yet the season is far from over.

"The kids have been working hard," said Ford. "They're all great kids. We've been playing pretty good basketball. The coaches are

Girls hoop starting to come around

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

"The girls on this team are enthusiastic, working hard, optimistic, and they are really starting to mesh nicely as a team," said first year coach Ellen Carr of her junior varsity basketball team when asked about the progress of her squad.

The improvements made over the course of this year are astounding, considering how there was a possibility there would not even be a team for lack of participants. As of now, the team roster stands at eight names, four of them freshmen.

This season was originally meant to be a transition year to get the girls varsity program up and running again. However, at 4-4, they have exceeded many expectations.

"I am very optimistic about the future of this program," Carr said. "We only have one junior, Katie [Wenmark], and no seniors, but I think we can put together some good varsity teams in the next few years."

What Cohasset lacks in numbers, it makes up for in hard work and discipline.

"[This team] is beginning to move away from what I call 'instant basketball' and really seeing the merit in strategy and set plays," Carr observed.

"They are a great bunch of kids who really listen," added Carr's eight year old daughter/"coaching assistant," Audrey.

"I am very optimistic about the future of this program, I think we can put together some good varsity teams in the next few years."
- Coach Ellen Carr

One of the things Skipper fans can look forward to will be the players that are going to carry over from the Middle School. Eighth grade center Danielle Pinkus has led her team with 15 points per game to an undefeated record.

The Lady Skippers defeated Hull last Tuesday 62-46. Freshmen shooting guard Heather Peraino and co-captain Maura O'Brien scored 22 and 16 points respectively. Freshman point guard LaRaine Langford paced the offense, dishing out six assists.

The next game Cohasset played was a loss to Dover, 52-34. Freshman Lindsay Grossman scored 15, while O'Brien and Langford also figured into the offensive mix with 10 points apiece.

"They really are becoming a team in every sense of the word," Carr said with a smile. "No girl is selfish and they really help motivate one another."

With the record standing at 4-4, and winnable games coming up in Notre Dame, Hanover and Abington, a plus .500 season could be on the horizon for this blossoming team.

"That is definitely a goal we are shooting for," said Carr. "If we can [finish the season with more wins than losses] we might be moved up to varsity as soon as next year. But still, another year at the JV level couldn't hurt."

Though very small in numbers, and young in age, Carr believes that they play with as much intensity as anyone.

Carr summed it up: "You can call us varsity, junior varsity, whatever. We just call ourselves Cohasset Girls Basketball."

Register for youth lacrosse on Jan. 29

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, which this spring will expand to field a team of third- and fourth-graders, will hold its sign-up for the spring season Saturday, Jan. 29, from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

Registrations will be taken for the 14 and Under program (7th- and 8th-graders), the 12 and under program (5th- and 6th-graders) and the new 10 and Under team.

One significant change for the spring of 2000 is that there will be just one Under-12 team. There have been two teams in each of the last two years. As a result, the number of roster spots will be limited; registrations will be taken on a first-come first-served basis, and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

The on-time registration fee is $80, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids. Late registrations, if roster spots are available, are $100.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 and Under level, a player can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School team.

Cohasset's junior lacrosse program is a member of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program. In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices for kids in fifth grade and up are scheduled for Monday and Friday afternoons; the Under-10 team's practice and game schedule is still being finalized. The teams will begin practicing in early March, games start in April and the season concludes with the MBYLL Jamboree in mid-June.

While the schedule should minimize conflicts, problems do sometimes arise. This year, because some interested players could be turned away due to limited roster spots, the lacrosse program is asking parents to sort out potential conflicts before enrolling their children.

"We work hard to avoid and understand conflicts," Chuck Jaffe, head coach, says, "but we need for parents to respect the limits on our roster. The occasional hockey or baseball game is one thing, but if a child wants to participate in a play — and will miss a month of the season to prepare for that play — they have made their choice and should leave the roster spot open for someone else who wants to put lacrosse first and would show up every day."

Bob Inman assists Jaffe on the 12 and Under level; Jaffe expects to run the 14 and Under program this year too, with assistance from Jim Murphy. The coaching situation for the new 10 and Under team is not yet clear.

The program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at the older levels — and on a limited basis with the new team — practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey equipment is allowed, although Jaffe warns that hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick.

Jaffe also notes that the Cohasset program welcomes girls, but that it does not play girls lacrosse, which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment.

"Many girls play in the MBYLL," he says, "but there are adjustments to make when they get older and start playing girls lacrosse."

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan. 29 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, call Jaffe at 383-9858.

point defeat to a strong Sharon team. Sweeney was hoping to come away with two wins and nearly had them.

The Skippers wound up on the losing end of a 51-27 defeat to New Bedford and disposed of Duxbury, 35-27. However, it was the 41-40 crusher against Sharon that hurt the worst.

Robert Hickey's pin at 152 pounds for Cohasset cut into the Sharon lead, but the Skippers weren't able to put the Hockomock League team away for good. Cohasset received big days from Chris Pratt (125), Liam O'Donnell (160) and Kevin DeVito (171), who all won by pin.

Duxbury didn't have a wrestler in the 215-pound category, leaving Joe Carbone with pin victories in his matches against New Bedford and Sharon.

Cohasset was looking for its sixth win on Wednesday against a "fair" Hanover team. Wrestling at home was to be a definite advantage for the Skippers in their attempt to establish and maintain the momentum Sweeney wanted to see through the remainder of the season.

Skippers make mark in national indoor lacrosse action

Three Cohasset High School boys lacrosse players have been picked for Mass. all-star teams competing in national indoor tournaments this past fall and later this month.

Two of the Skippers, seniors Kevin DeVito and Travis Moore, played for Massachusetts in an all-star event held recently in Baltimore, Maryland. The third, junior Ronan Buick, will represent Cohasset as part of the Bay State all-stars competing in the National Indoor High School Championships in Princeton, New Jersey.

At the Baltimore tournament, which attracted not only the country's top junior and senior high school lacrosse players but also coaches and scouts from 50 NCAA programs, DeVito and Moore played key roles as their team finished a surprising 4-2 in the tournament.

"Massachusetts' best showing ever," reported team organizer Burke Walker, president of Marshfield-based Top Gun Lacrosse. "Beating Baltimore and Philadelphia really opened some eyes down there."

The Mass. all-stars, selected from a pool of more than 500 players, represented schools including Philips Andover, St. Sebastian's, Roxbury Latin, Milton Academy, Xaverian, Nashua (N.H.), Hingham, Duxbury, Marshfield and North Andover.

Moore, who led the Skippers in scoring in 1999, finished with eight goals and three assists in tournament play, including a hat trick in Massachusetts' win over Pittsburgh.

DeVito, the Skippers' 2000 co-captain and a Bay State Games gold medalist, was in the goal for both the Philadelphia and Baltimore upsets, and scored two goals and an assist as a field player.

Cohasset defenseman Buick, also a Bay State Games gold medalist, was announced last week as a selection for the Massachusetts entry in the national tournament over Martin Luther King Day weekend.

Buick is the seventh Cohasset player to be picked for the state indoor all-star team since 1995, and follows in the footsteps of his older brother Jamie, the eastern Massachusetts regular-season scoring leader in 1997 and currently a sophomore attackman at nationally-ranked Ohio Wesleyan.

still working hard, we've been out scouting games. Anything can happen in this league. Hull proved that when they beat Norton. The kids just have to have faith and really get after it. I think you'll see some upsets when teams meet for the second time."

Volunteer coaches for youth lacrosse

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program is in need of additional coaches at all levels for the spring of 2000.

This year, for the first time, the five-year-old youth program will field an Under-10 team made up of third- and fourth-grade students. This is where there will be the greatest need for new coaches.

Cohasset Youth lacrosse also will field one team in the Under-12 and Under-14 divisions of the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League.

The two older teams are expected to have Chuck Jaffe as head coach, while the new team is still having the coaching situation worked out. But Jaffe's status is uncertain; even if he is available to coach, his travel schedule may force him to miss more games and practices than he has in the past.

"At the very least, we will need more help in running practices and keeping the teams going while I am away," Jaffe said. "There already is one assistant coach at each level, but we need at least one more. We also want as many coaches as possible at the Under-10 level, so that the newest, youngest players get maximum instruction and repetition in practice."

Jaffe said Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has typically preferred to use coaches who did not have children on the teams, but that will change this year — particularly with the Under-10 team — in order to make sure there is sufficient supervision.

The Under-10 team will make its practice schedule based on the availability of coaches and fields; the older boys will practice on Mondays and Fridays, with games on Sundays. Anyone interested in coaching should be available regularly for at least two days per week; the minimum time commitment is roughly four hours per week.

Jaffe said that potential coaches do not need to have a lot of lacrosse experience or the ability to diagram plays and other advanced chores, but they must have the basic rules knowledge and stick proficiency needed to help teach youngsters how to properly play the game.

For more information on coaching in the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program, call Jeffe at 383-9858 or David Buick at 383-2579.

MacQuarrie named Trinity soccer captain

Junior forward Brett MacQuarrie of Cohasset has been named a captain of the men's varsity soccer team at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. for the fall 2000 season.

MacQuarrie, son of Chris and Jane Kyricos of Cohasset, was the Bantam's second highest scorer this season. In addition he is among the top-10 league scorers in the New England Small College Athletic Conference (NESCAC), which includes Amherst, Bates, Bowdoin, Colby, Connecticut College, Hamilton, Middlebury, Trinity, Tufts University, Wesleyan University and Williams College. MacQuarrie was also named NESCAC player the week of Oct. 19, following both goals against Tufts University, including the game winner in sudden-death overtime and two assists against Eastern Connecticut State University.

This year the Bantams broke the school record with a 13-4 season. Climbing back from three tough losses to a seven-game undefeated streak took them all the way to the ECAC D-3 post-season tournament where they defeated Plymouth State in the quarterfinals and Amherst in overtime in the semifinals, but lost to Middlebury College in the championship game in Middlebury, Vt.

According to oach Ed Mighten, who was named NESCAC coach of the year, MacQuarrie's speed and crucial goals, including two in post-season tournament play, were key factors in the team's outstanding season.

A political science major, MacQuarrie will be studying abroad at the University of Maastricht, The Netherlands, second semester.

First bank robbery in eight years

The Cohasset Police Department had a fairly busy month during December. "We suffered our first bank robbery since 1992. Fortunately no one was hurt. We are currently working on some very good leads in conjunction with the FBI and hope to have the case solved soon," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

During December, the department made seven arrests, three for operating under the influence of alcohol; two for protective custody; one for an outstanding warrant and finally one for a section 12 medical.

There was one breaking and entering reported during December, a business.

During the month, the department issued 116 motor vehicle citations, for fines totaling $4,095 and 40 parking tickets for fines totaling $1,590.

During December, the department issued 116 motor vehicle citations, for fines totaling $4,095 and 40 parking tickets for fines totaling $1,590.

The Emergency Dispatch Center received 459 calls for service during December; of those 89 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

"We received some good news during December; the department applied for and was awarded a grant in the amount of $10,000 to support our Community Policing program," Noonan said. "The grant was received from the Executive Office of Public Safety. The money we receive will allow us to continue some of our very important programs, such as Marine Patrols, Bike Patrols and Specialized Traffic Enforcement. Unfortunately we were unsuccessful in our application for our D.A.R.E. grant in the amount of $12,000 this year."

The police department experienced no Y2K problems. All of the computers are up and running perfectly as well as the remainder of the emergency equipment.

Open door leads to drug arrest

An Ash Street man is facing drug charges after police discovered marijuana plants growing in his bedroom.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said a neighbor called police to investigate why a door was open at 32 Ash St. on Saturday.

"The door was open most of the afternoon and the temperature was low," he said.

In the process of checking the security of the building, police found a row of lights and shopping bag full of marijuana leaves in an upstairs bedroom, Jackson said.

Shortly thereafter Anthony J. Wigmore, 22, returned home and was placed under arrest. Police subsequently obtained a search warrant and found further drug paraphernalia and weapons. Weapons seized included a stiletto knife, switchblade, shirikans, sling shot, kung fu sticks and a mace.

Wigmore was arraigned Tuesday in Quincy District Court on charges of possession of a Class D substance (marijuana) with intent to distribute/cultivate and illegal possession of a Class D substance. He was not charged with dangerous weapons violations because they were not on his person, Jackson said. Wigmore was released on personal recognizance with a court date set for April 4.

The true meaning of sports

Special Olympians compete in Hingham

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Let me win. But if I cannot win, let me be brave in the attempt.

These are the words of the Special Olympics oath. Examples of such bravery were abundant on Monday as trials for the 2000 Massachusetts Winter Special Olympics were held at Hingham's Pilgrim Skating Arena.

Parents, volunteers, and athletes cheered on each and every competitor, who are eligible for Special Olympics because of mental retardation, cognitive delays, or significant learning or vocational problems due to cognitive delay.

Hingham was the home to trials for the speed skating and figure skating competitions, as competitors from around the state positioned themselves for the state Winter Games to be held in Williamstown on Feb. 1-3.

While only one competitor could win each speed skating race or figure skating competition, every athlete lived fully up to the high ideals espoused in the Special Olympics oath.

Those in attendance marveled at the determination of one young speed skater, who fell nearly ten times during the 400-meter race.

Each time the boy slammed the ice, he simply got back up and started again. By the time he approached the finish line, the other athletes were cheering wildly for him.

Such camaraderie is a trademark of the Special Olympics. While many associate the Special Olympics with the volunteer "huggers" who provide the athletes with encouragement, it is often the other athletes who best understand what has been accomplished in crossing the finish line.

"One of the best things about the competitions are the friends the kids make," said Geri Finlay of Malden, whose son Michael is a level-five figure skater, the highest which can be achieved in Special Olympics. "At the state games, the kids have barn dances and parties, and everyone just has a blast. It's a wonderful social atmosphere."

While her son has been taking private lessons for four years and can perform jumps on the ice, Finlay knows many Special Olympians will never aspire to such athletic heights.

"The one little kid with cerebral palsy that gets out there with her shaky first step, that's as hard for her as it is for my son to do an axel," she said. "The most important thing is just to be able to compete."

"So-called normal kids want goals, but special needs kids want goals as well. These kids work hard for what they get and they want competition too."

— Geri Finlay of Malden, mother of a Special Olympian

Among some of the benefits Special Olympics lists for athletes in its mission statement are greater self-confidence, a more positive self-image, friendships, and increased family support.

One young man who has assuredly enjoyed these benefits is 18-year old Peter Filosa of Medfield, a level-one figure skater who has been competing for two years.

The outgoing Filosa trains every Sunday in Natick, and had a variety of answers when asked why he participates in Special Olympics.

"I love it," said Filosa. "There's usually a lot of pretty girl judges, and they tell me I'm doing a good job. I like to get out there and go crazy. It's fun."

Playing to the crowd is not reserved for professional figure skaters, and Filosa does his best to get the audience involved. He skates to the song, "Are You Ready For This," a crowd-enthusing number used to hype up fans at Boston Celtics games.

"I skate for my fans," Filosa laughed, pointing to his fellow Special Olympians from the West Suburban Rink in Natick, his coaches, and his mother and sister.

After winning a gold medal for his skating in the compulsories, Filosa beamed with pride, as he walked meandered through Pilgrim Arena.

"I'm a five-time champion," he said happily but not boastfully. "I won gold medals in the summer in track and field. I get them framed and hang them on my wall at home."

While Filosa does love skating for the sake of the sport, he also wants to win. Finlay said finding the will to win is an important step for Special Olympians.

"It's one thing for the kids to come out to the rink and practice," she said, "but it's another thing to compete. So-called normal kids want goals, but special needs kids want goals as well. These kids work hard for what they get and they want competition too."

Some of the Special Olympians who go to the state meet in Williamstown will eventually qualify for the World Winter Games to be held in Anchorage, Alaska in March 2001. 2,000 athletes from more than 150 countries will participate in the World Winter Games, and Finlay hopes her son will be one of them.

"Michael made it to the Summer World Games in North Carolina last year for sailing and we had a wonderful time. He got to meet people from all over the world. He got to have experiences he never would have had without Special Olympics."

The Pilgrim Skating Arena donates the ice time for the annual event.

Peter Filosa, who says he loves to skate, gives a cheer after his freestyle skating program.

Grand plans are floated for village and harbor

Chamber's proposal could reach $14 million

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Dean Rizzo

Red brick sidewalks. Old-fashioned lampposts. Underground utility lines. Amenities like these may seem like a blueprint for a new upscale development, but leaders of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce believe such improvements could bring new life to the town's village and harbor.

The price tag for the suggested improvements could be as high as $14 million, yet those behind the plans say they are within the realm of possibility.

"A lot of people think we're this rich little town and we won't get any state or federal money, but that's totally not the case. If we do this right, we can achieve these goals with minimal investments by the town."
— VRTF chairman Dean Rizzo

Thanks to the financial support of two of the town's most well-heeled businessmen, as well as a $5,000 appropriation at town meeting, the Chamber has $200,000 to work with to develop design drawings and engineering plans which members hope will generate millions of dollars in state and federal grants to do the actual construction work.

Peter Roy, owner of the Atlantica restaurant and Kimball's By-The-Sea hotel in the harbor, and Gerd Ordelheide, owner of the Red Lion Inn in the village, have both contributed what Chamber of Commerce member and Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF) chairman Dean Rizzo termed "substantial" amounts of money to the project.

Roy became involved in the project after Rizzo brought a model of a proposed harbor walkway to his office a year and a half ago.

"I was quite intrigued," Roy said of seeing the model for the first time. "It represented all that was possible for the future of this town."

Rizzo, who has spearheaded efforts to upgrade infrastructure in the village and harbor since 1996, said the involvement of Roy and Ordelheide in the project has given it newfound life.

"We now have two key anchors in these areas, and we feel we're ready to get going," Rizzo said.

The Chamber unveiled the full scope of its plans for the village and harbor at its annual meeting last Wednesday at Atlantica.

An audience of more than 100 listened intently as Rizzo explained the project, which can be essentially broken down into three parts: $2.5 million in village infrastructure improvements, a $2.5 million harbor walkway, and a $5.5 million project

Call firefighters state their case

Future is in limbo

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The call fire department may be on life support, but selectmen have yet to pull the plug.

In his FY 2001 budget proposal to selectmen, Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested eliminating the $31,000 appropriated for the town's call fire department as a way to help offset the $188,685 cost of the four new firefighter/paramedics the town voted to hire at last month's special town meeting.

Selectmen heard Haddad's proposal at the board's Jan. 11 meeting, but were reluctant to eliminate the call department without hearing from the call firefighters.

Ten of the town's 13 call firefighters were present at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting. Two of the group's senior members, Bruce Pratt and John MacNeill, told selectmen of the services call firefighters provide to the town.

"The real value of the call force is that you have people available 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Pratt said. "Not all of us are in town all the time, but some of us are always around. Everybody is CPR trained, and we have six certified EMTs. We all received this training on our own time."

"I'm alive nine months on Sunday because of two of these young men. If you can find a better way to spend $30,000, show me."
— Hull resident Joseph Gagne

Pratt said he and other call firefighters have noticed a decrease in the amount of times they have been called by the fire department in the last couple of years.

Two weeks ago, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln told selectmen he couldn't use call firefighters as much as he would like because of union con-

DEP okays water tank

To be built on Scituate Hill off Route 3A

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The members of the water commission are raising their drinking glasses in a toast to the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP). On Jan. 14, DEP approved the water commission's plan to build a 75-foot-high, 1.8 million gallon water tank on Scituate Hill off Route 3A. Water Commission Chairman John K. McNabb Jr. said the town now has all the local and state permits it needs to build the new tank.

"Although we do not have an official timetable, the rule-of-thumb is that it takes one year to build the tank from the time it goes out to bid," McNabb said. "Tutela Engineering is preparing a request for proposals now, so using the rule-of-thumb we should be able to finish the tank by January, 2001."

McNabb said the water commission would solicit bids within one to two weeks. The town should be able to choose a construction company in four to eight weeks, McNabb added.

The new, self-standing water tank will be constructed of pre-rolled sheets of steel welded together at the construction site. McNabb said the water commissioners chose a steel tank because it's less expensive and easier to construct than other designs. The water commission had also considered building a concrete tank or a steel unit on stilts.

"Another advantage of steel is that you can build it in any weather except for a blizzard," McNabb said. "The actual construction of the tank takes about six months. It's nice that we now have a real timetable that we can follow. We're in good shape to finish the tank around the end of this year."

Selecting a site for the new tank was not an easy process. The water commission has been attempting to find a spot for the tank since 1997. Two years ago, town meeting approved a request by the water commission for $1.4 million to build a new 2 million gallon water tank on Bear Hill next to the town's only other water storage structure. Public disapproval of the Bear Hill site propelled the water commissioners on a hunt for a new location. In 1998, town meeting allocated an extra $200,000 for the water commission to build the tank on Scituate Hill.

"We're in good shape to finish the tank around the end of this year."
—John McNabb, water commission chairman

The Scituate Hill site did not elicit any public disapproval, but it presented other problems. The land is owned by J. Michael Susi and Sons, which wants to build residential housing on the site. Susi lacks the special permit needed to build residential housing on Scituate Hill, which is located in an industrial zone. The water commission and Susi discussed trading a parcel of land for water connections to the tank, but that deal never materialized. The water commissioners wanted to build the tank near the highest point of the hill to take advantage of gravity and provide increased water pressure. Susi wanted to reserve all the highest points for prime residential housing, or commercial buildings.

On May 26, 1999, the water commission acquired a permanent easement by eminent domain from J. Michael Susi and Sons for a half-acre of land on Scituate Hill for the water tank. The water commission paid $52,000 for that taking — $40,000 for the tank parcel and $12,000 for an additional 1/2-acre of land for a temporary construction easement. The land is still technically owned by J. Michael Susi and Sons under the name Westwood Limited Partners.

The taking gave the commissioners the parcel they needed for the tank, but did not include land for an access road or an underground pipe to send water to homes and businesses. The best location for a pipe lay on a parcel of land adjacent to the tank owned by Crocker II Realty Trust. Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill owner Paul Barry is an officer in the Crocker II Trust.

On Aug. 17, 1999, the commissioners voted to take by eminent domain just under an acre of land owned by Crocker II. In August,

Setting up shop in village

Will reside in Independence Bldg.

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Change, it seems, is a way of life these days in Cohasset Village.

Renovations are ongoing at the Red Lion Inn, momentum is building for a multimillion dollar project for downtown improvements, and the idea of a village train station has been resurrected as well.

Another addition to the list of changes in the village is the use of the historic Independence Building, located in front of St. Stephens Church at 24 South Main St. The building was slated to become a residence, but will instead be the new home of the Cohasset Greenery, a store specializing in European country garden items, including a large selection of Dutch flowers.

The new store actually is an expansion of the Hingham Greenery location on South Street in Hingham Square. Ellen Nally Brown, owner of the Hingham Greenery, said a lack of space in her store necessitated finding a second location.

"We've actually been looking for a new location for about a year now," said Brown in the cozy confines of her Hingham store. "We're just totally out of space here. I get funny looks from the UPS guys when they bring deliveries in because they know there's no where

No place for hate

Cohasset became a 'No Place for Hate' community at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting, as selectmen unanimously voted to sign a proclamation and enact three or four diversity-minded activities over the next 12 months.

Selectman Thomas Callahan, who first brought the idea to the rest of the board, said he was bombarded with calls supporting the program.

"I've never received so many calls on one issue during my time on the board," Callahan said. "We've gotten overwhelming support from the community on this. The PSO diversity committee and the PSO METCO committee are doing a lot already."

'No Place for Hate', is a program of the Anti-Defamation League (ADL), a human rights group. ADL representative said a number of surrounding communities are joining the program.

"Hingham, Holbrook, Plymouth, and Quincy have already endorsed the program," he said. "Soon, I'll be talking to Scituate, Hanover, and Marshfield."

Susan Etkind of the PSO diversity committee was excited about the town embracing the goals her committee has worked for since its inception in 1995.

"We welcome the chance to work with the selectmen and the community at large," she said.

Selectmen recommend town planner position

Selectmen unanimously recommended a $25,000 appropriation for a part-time town planner at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting.

Planning board chairman Al Moore said professional help has become needed as developers' plans have become more sophisticated over the years.

"I'm in my third term on the planning board, and things have changed very dramatically in that time," Moore said. "The whole profession has evolved in the last ten years."

Moore said a town planner could also help with creating a master plan, a process which the planning board has been hard-pressed to begin without professional help.

"This board has been criticized, probably rightfully so, for not being more proactive," he said. "Putting a professional planner in place would do nothing but help in a master plan process."

Selectman Merle Brown suggested looking for a contractor for the position, much like the way conservation agent Paul Shea works with the conservation commission.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would look into the possibility of contracting the position.

Selectmen limit raises for department heads

Selectmen voted 3-2 Tuesday night to limit raises for town department heads to 5 percent in the Fiscal Year 2001 budget.

Town Manager Mark Haddad had suggested a 6-1/2 percent raise for himself and Council of Elder Affairs director Kathy Bryanton.

"I'm not backing down on any of my salary recommendations," Haddad said before selectmen took the vote. "The average increase for department heads is about 5 percent, and that's with the Town Manager and the Elder Affairs director factored in."

Selectmen Thomas Callahan and Merle Brown did the annual review of Haddad's performance, giving what Callahan called "a glowing recommendation." Still, Callahan thought no department head's salary should go up more than the 3-1/2 percent common in union contracts.

"I think a person in your position should be making more," he told Haddad. "But if we set a precedent of increases at a certain level, it puts us in trouble for the future."

Haddad said he "totally disagreed" with the principle of limiting raises for department heads, noting last year's municipal budget increase of less than one percent.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said 5 percent raises seemed fair for department heads who performed exceptionally well.

"I don't have a quarrel with anyone getting 5 percent," she said. "That's a wonderful increase."

Callahan, Brown, and Sullivan all voted to limit department head raises to 5 percent, with selectman Fred Koed and Ronnie McMorris voting against.

Lagrotteria named to committee

James Lagrotteria, 104 Howe Road, was named to the senior housing committee by selectmen Tuesday night.

Lagrotteria was named to the committee to replace Joe Buckley, who resigned.

School facilities committee schedule

School facilities committee chairman announced a new schedule of meetings for the committee, which meets at the selectmen's meeting room in Town Hall.

The committee will meet next Wednesday, Feb. 2. At the Feb. 2 meeting, Spofford said the he will update the public about the possibility of having meetings in addition to the committee's usual Wednesday meeting.

"We're still going to meet Feb. 9, Feb. 16., and Feb. 23 (all Wednesdays), that much is for sure," Spofford said. "On Feb. 2, we may call additional meetings if we feel they are necessary."

Citizens can keep themselves appraised of the committee's progress by attending any of its 7 p.m. meetings or by watching the meetings on cable channel 3.

McCain comes to South Shore

Presidential candidate speaks at Chamber of Commerce breakfast

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A presidential candidate made a rare South Shore appearance last Thursday morning, as Sen. John McCain (R-Arizona) spoke at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce breakfast in Randolph.

McCain took a break from his campaign schedule in New Hampshire to field questions from an audience of 900 Chamber of Commerce members and explain his stance on some of the campaign's most pressing issues.

Having attended 94 Town Hall meetings while campaigning for the Feb. 1 New Hampshire primary, McCain said he has closed the gap with his opponent, Texas Gov. George W. Bush, and predicts a photo-finish in the Granite State.

"I think it's going to be a very close race in New Hampshire," McCain said during a brief speech before entertaining questions from the audience. "Five months ago, the polls said I had only three percent of the vote, and that was with a five percent margin of error. We've come a long way."

A light-hearted McCain told the audience he had been asked why he did not run for president on the Reform Party ticket, made famous by Minnesota governor and former professional wrestler Jesse Ventura.

"I'm a proud conservative Republican, but Gov. Ventura and I do have a lot in common," McCain joked. "I was a mediocre high school and college wrestler, we were both in the Navy, and I like to wear a feathered boa around Congress on occasion."

Republican presidential candidate Sen. John McCain chats with state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray at the South Shore Chamber of Commerce breakfast last week.

Before entertaining questions, McCain told the audience his views on the case of Elian Gonzalez, the six-year old Cuban youngster who has become a symbol of the political divide between Cuba and the United States. Gonzalez's mother died while trying to smuggle herself and Elian into the United States. Elian was brought to Miami, but his father and Cuban authorities have since demanded his return.

"In New York Harbor, we have a statue which says 'Give us your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,' and this boy's mother literally gave her life so he could breathe free," McCain said. "I believe in parental rights, but if the Berlin Wall was still up and a mother helped her kid over the top, we wouldn't make the kid go back. The young boy should be allowed to stay in the United States."

McCain also talked about taxes, an issue which Bush has focused on in recent days. McCain has proposed a $240 billion tax-cut, while Bush has put forth a plan with a $483 billion cut.

McCain acknowledged Bush's larger proposed tax cut, but said it provided too much relief for the wealthiest segment of the population.

"Bush's tax cut is bigger than mine, but 38 percent of the tax cuts go to the wealthiest one percent," McCain said. "My plan lifts as many as $25 million Americans into the 15 percent tax bracket and puts 62 percent of our budget surplus into Social Security."

In the wake of Harvard-Pilgrim's bankruptcy declaration, many in Massachusetts have become concerned about the state of health care in the region. McCain said government red-tape has held up reforms in the health-care industry.

"I know the problem is felt more severely in your state, but it's a problem all over the country," he said. "Ten of us in here could sit down and come up with a patients' bill of rights for members of HMOs. It's simple. But Democrats are gridlocked by trial lawyers and Republicans are gridlocked by insurance companies."

McCain's status as a former Navy fighter pilot during the Vietnam War and his 5 1/2-year stint as a prisoner of war have been well-chronicled. If elected president, he said he would discontinue President Clinton's practice of putting American forces under the command of the United Nations.

"The UN does a good job at peacekeeping, but it is not equipped to be involved in peacemaking operations, such as the disaster in Bosnia," McCain said. "No longer can we send American men and women into battle unless the goal is a quick and decisive victory."

The tight race in New Hampshire and Bush's ability to raise money ensure a possible victory by McCain in gaining the Republican nomination will be neither decisive or quick.

Nevertheless, many lined up to meet McCain after the presentation, some of whom brought along McCain's book, "Faith of My Fathers", to be autographed. One man, scrambling to find an item to have autographed, even pulled out his young son's Pop Warner football card for McCain to sign.

Sturdy running for selectman

Vocal proponent of village station

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Now we have a race.

Longtime planning board member Robert Sturdy declared himself a candidate for selectman last week, obtaining nomination papers last Friday. Sturdy has been a member of the planning board since 1988, when he was elected to the first of three terms on the board.

Former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins announced his candidacy for selectman Jan. 12, and had been the only citizen to declare himself a candidate for the open selectmen's seat until Sturdy's announcement.

Sturdy has recently been at the forefront of a planning board effort to revisit the idea of a village station for the Cohasset stop on the proposed Greenbush commuter rail line.

Selectmen ultimately have the final vote on the placement of the station. Sturdy said the vote will have dramatic repercussions for the village area.

"I'm running because I think the major issue is the revitalization of the village," Sturdy said. "The location of a train station downtown goes along with that. I want to see the effort go forward and there's only so much I can do on the planning board."

While acknowledging his interest in the revitalization of the village, Sturdy said he is concerned about a number of other issues affecting Cohasset as well.

"I'm interested in the town as a whole," he said. "This isn't a one topic candidacy. I have several children living in town and have grandchildren in the school system. I think I can serve the town best by being on the Board of Selectmen. If it wasn't for this opportunity, I would stay on the planning board."

Selectmen are not allowed to hold other elected town offices, meaning Sturdy would have to vacate his seat on the planning board if elected as a selectman. If his bid is unsuccessful, he may retain his seat on the planning board.

Sturdy moved to Cohasset in 1973, serving on the Brookline school committee prior to his arrival in town. He hopes to use a position as selectmen to move the proposed train station to the village.

"I think the most important thing is to seize this opportunity to make the village economically viable," he said. "I'm putting my candidacy where my mouth is. If I were elected, I'd be 20 percent of the board. I might make the vote 3-2."

The planning board voted unanimously Jan. 12 to bring the idea of a village station back to selectmen. Sturdy said he is trying to organize a joint meeting of selectmen and proponents of both village and 3A stations to spark debate on the issue.

The issue was not discussed at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, but selectmen chairman Merle Brown said he has asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to explore the possibility of putting an train station initiative on the annual town meeting warrant.

"I asked Mark to go to Town Counsel and look at putting a couple of ballot questions on the warrant," Brown said. "The questions could be pretty simple. 'Do you want a station on 3A?' or 'Do you want a station in the village?' We'll see where it goes."

As of Wednesday afternoon, no candidates had pulled papers for either of the two school committee seats up for election on April 8. Betsy Connolly, who replaced Joe McElroy for the last year of his term when he resigned last year, will not seek a full term.

The other incumbent up for reelection, Kathy Ofsthun, is still undecided about running for another term on the school committee.

Three incumbents have elected to run again for the Library Trustees, Carol Riley, Agnes McCann, and patience Towle are all seeking reelection. Water commissioner John McNabb and sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil are also seeking reelection.

The last date to obtain nomination papers from the town clerk's office is Thursday, Feb. 17.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

HELD AT BAY
One small addition that pays big dividends is the construction of a bay window in the kitchen. This project often adds just enough width for the freestanding table and chairs needed for an eat-in kitchen. And to make optimal use of the added space, consider a banquette. This popular approach to built-in seating can save room because it requires extra space for traffic flow on only two sides (versus the clearance on all four sides required by a freestanding table). Aside from providing families with a cozy nook in which to take meals and snacks, a banquette can increase the functionality of the kitchen even further when it is outfitted with drawers of storage under the bench.
From concept to installation, THE DESIGNING WOMAN goes to great lengths to ensure that the kitchen remodeling process goes smoothly. When we create an interior design plan, we consider the customer's personal tastes and space demands. We coordinate the selection of material and supervision of craftsmen. We can also advise you on window and door replacement, structural changes and other remodeling techniques. Call us at 383-6411 to learn more about our services or to arrange a convenient consultation.
HINT: A banquette table with a single, centered pedestal is best for easy access.

AROUND TOWN

NEW ARRIVAL!

If you see Merle and Joan Brown smiling more than usual, be sure to congratulate them! The Browns are the proud grandparents of a brand-new miracle, Christian Joseph Fleming. Christian arrived at 9:02 a.m., Jan. 18. He weighed in at 7 lb. 2 oz. and measured 20-ins.long. Christian's parents are Marcy (Brown) and Don Fleming.

Congratulations!

BITTERSWEET NEWS

It was a sad/happy occasion last week when we heard of State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray returing — sad for us, but happy for her! For as long as we can remember, Mary Jeanette has been doing for others! I remember her as my CCD teacher — I remember when our street was flooded and she came (complete with boots) to check it when she was selectman; in times of joy and in times of sadness she was always there, and there wasn't an event that she missed!

Mary Jeanette, you deserve to have tons of fun now and we certainly cannot thank you enough for your services, your love and your kindnesses — it is doubtful there is anyone who is able to fill your shoes when you step down, but we are sure you will help out any way you can!

WONDERFUL COUPLE

Congratulations to Ellie and Paul Hardy who were married on Nantucket Island Nov. 27 with their children there to share the wonderful day!

A toast to a wonderful lady, wonderful couple and family and a super life together — forever!

HONORS AT HOFSTRA

Here is some news about Adam Sasso who made the dean's list at Hofstra University. Right after he made the grade at Hofstra he transferred to Emerson College in Boston, so you can be sure to see Adam around town and also be sure you will see his name in print next semester!

DEAN'S LIST

Hats off to Catlin O'Neil, a first semester freshman who made the dean's list at Villanova! Catlin is majoring in finance and commerce and is a Cohasset High School grad.

Everyone is so proud of you, Catlin!

VALENTINE REMINDER

A Valentine reminder for our seniors — the annual Valentine Tea is to be held at the Second Congregational Church Friday, Feb. 11, at 1 p.m. You have to RSVP to CEA at 383-9112, then go and have a super time!

LACROSSE CAMP

We have been asked to tell you that if you have anyone interested in lacrosse (boys and girls) to call the Amonte Sports League/Camp at the South Shore Sports Center in Hingham — the girls' dates are from Jan. 12 through Feb. 18, and the boys will have an Amonte Sports February Vacation Camp at the Canton Sports Plex.

Both coaches have more qualifications than you can imagine (Kelly Amonte is a four-time All-American at the University of Maryland, World Cup Champion, all-time NCAA Lacrosse leader and 1996 Athlete of the Year for ACC).

Scott Anderson (boys) is the Harvard University Men's Lacrosse coach with credentials that are endless. Most of all, he is a four-time New England Coach of the Year; three NCAA Tournament Appearances; two-time Ivy League Champion, Dartmouth University Grad and All-Ivy Player.

For more details and/or applications, call Amonte Sports at 781-788-8112 or 1-877-AMONTE.

POLICE SHORTAGE

Just a suggestion — let's all get behind our Police Chief and get a new officer to help us out! As Chief Noonan stated recently, we really need both daytime and nighttime officers and there is a shortage!

SOCCER STAR

Congratulations to Junior forward Brett MacQuarrie who was recently named captain of the men's varsity soccer team at Trinity College for the fall 2000 season

Brett was the second highest scorer this past season and is among the top 10 league scores in the New England Small Athletic Conference — WOW!

More news about Brett is that he will study abroad for his second semester at the University of Maastricht, The Netherlands, (we hope to hear about that upon his return)!

Brett is the son of Chris and Jane Kyricos and we are sure that they are very proud of him!

A FINE LADY

It is with a great deal of regret that we report the passing of Mrs. Philomena Conte — can't you just picture her sitting on her front porch? A fine lady with a super family; she will be missed!

A BETTER PLACE

May we please take our hats off to Peter Roy (again) and Gerd Ordelheide for trying to make our town a better place to live! We really appreciate all your time, efforts and love for the town!

Hope all of your dreams (ours, too) come true!

That's the news! I am hoping you will call with yours, it keeps this a success — you know, everyone wants to hear about you or yours!

Landscaping techniques reduce water pollution

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

People can help reduce pollution in Little Harbor simply by changing the way they landscape their yards.

That's the message from board of health member Steve Bobo, a member of the South Coastal Watershed Team, one of 20 teams in the state devoted to reducing pollution in the watershed.

The Little Harbor water quality study conducted by engineers Camp Dresser McKee was released last week. According to the report, only 40 percent of the nitrogen and phosphorous in the body of Little Harbor were caused by septic systems. The balance of the pollution-causing nutrients came from lawn fertilizer.

"The watershed teams in eastern Massachusetts are looking to do something about lawn care," Bobo said. "We want to identify programs to reduce water usage and reduce the amount of nutrients in groundwater."

According to the Environmental Protection Agency, 50-95 percent of phosphates and nitrogen in lawn fertilizer gets into groundwater. Bobo said the problem is worsened when people use far more fertilizer than they need.

"A 20-pound bag of fertilizer says it should cover 1/5 of an acre," he said. "That's 100 pounds an acre. Some people apply fertilizer four times a season. Nobody needs 400 pounds of fertilizer a season. People may not realize it, but it's really polluting."

"Nobody needs 400 pounds of fertilizer a season. People may not realize it, but it's really polluting."
Health board member Steve Bobo

To show people how to achieve results in their gardens without using so much fertilizer, the Cohasset Garden Club invited landscape designer Mike Walsh to speak at its Tuesday meeting.

Walsh, who owns Horticultural Concepts in Quincy, has appeared on national television and explained tips for Environmentally Sound Landscaping (ESL).

"By conserving the amount of water you use and reducing the use of chemicals, you can get beautiful results while saving nature at the same time," Walsh told members of the Garden Club.

Walsh said gardeners could reduce the amount of fertilizer they need simply by creating a smaller lawn.

"Lawns are hard to beat as a recreational surface, but I find the sides of the house never really get used," he said. "Those can be a great place to plant daffodils or meadows, which need a very low-level of maintenance."

Walsh said grown covers, such as Bearberry, Juniper, Ivy, and Moss could also be used to design a landscape which has less lawn.

To construct an environmentally-friendly landscape, Walsh suggested using certain types of grasses, which require only 15 to 20 percent of the water which a normal lawn does. He said grasses such as Turf-Type Tall Fescues and Lofts Eco Mix are available at Home Depot and garden stores and are worth the extra effort to find.

"If you build a healthy lawn, you don't need chemicals," he said. "If you put in crappy grass, you're going to get crappy grass."

To maintain the lawn with the environment in mind, Walsh said the most important thing a gardener can do is to mow with a sharp blade.

"Dull mower blades thrash grasses and dry them out," he said. "Before mowing, put your thumb on the blade. It should be as sharp as a pair of scissors."

Walsh also said watering should be done heavily and infrequently, and never during the day.

"Daylight watering is wasteful and inefficient," he said. "It needs to be wet down to six inches."

If his techniques are followed, Walsh said lawns should only need to be fertilized twice per year.

Delivery dilemma

Family with house on common can't get mail at home

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

One of the joys of owning a home is having one's mail delivered.

After years of combination-lock mailboxes in apartment buildings, new homeowners can look forward to opening their mailboxes and receiving letters from longtime friends and their favorite magazines

After 35 years of living at 63 Highland Ave., Emmett Holt and his wife Elizabeth moved to a new house next door at 56 North Main St. At their old house, the Holts has received their mail without a problem.

Upon moving to the new house in mid-September, Emmett Holt installed a mail box alongside the front door, similar to all other houses in the Common Historic District, which is on the National Register of Historic Places.

For several days, the Holts noticed they had not been receiving their mail. Holt went to the Post office to investigate the problem and was told new homes must have mail boxes on the street.

"He's in kind of a pickle."
— Postmaster Steve Cabezas

Since he lives on the Common, Holt had to file a formal request with the Historic District Commission in order to locate a mailbox on the street.

The Commission voted unanimously against having a mailbox on the common in November. Commission member Marian Atkinson, who lives on the Common, said the decision was made to protect the historic character of the Common.

"The portion of land where the mailbox would be belongs to the town," she said. "Since all the other houses on the Common have mailboxes on our houses, we voted against putting it on the street."

Selectmen, who have complete authority over the Common, also voted unanimously against having a mailbox on the Common.

Now, Holt was between a rock and a hard place. Post Office officials had said he would need a mailbox on the street to get home delivery, but both the selectmen and Historic District Commission voted against having a mailbox on the street.

"He's in kind of a pickle," said Postmaster Steve Cabezas of Holt, who still does not have home delivery. "This happens sometimes with new houses, but his issue is a little unique because of the historic district."

Cabezas said Holt's long driveway makes delivery to the house difficult because mail trucks would have to back out onto North Main Street.

"The new mail trucks don't have side windows, and we only have them back up as a last resort," he said.

Cabezas said he expected the issue to be resolved "in the next few days", but added he wasn't sure whether Holt's house would become part of a walking route or a driven route.

"More than likely, he'll get some sort of home delivery," Canbezas said.

For now, Holt will keep getting his mail the old-fashioned way.

"I go down and pick it up every day," he said.

No water at CHS

Cohasset middle-school students had an unexpected two-day vacation and it wasn't due to the snowy nor'easter that wreaked havoc on local roadways this week.

Rather it was lack of water at the school that forced officials to cancel school Tuesday and Wednesday. Water had to be shut off to the school after a leak in a water main that runs under the driveway near the football field was discovered Monday afternoon. "It has nothing to do with the building," Principal Curtis Collins said.

But the unexpected incident did present officials with the logistical problem of notifying the 500 or so students that school was called off.

School officials made key phone calls and the news spread quickly. Bus drivers also ran their morning routes on Tuesday and stopped where students were waiting to let them know there was no school. Notices were also put on radio and television stations.

Nevertheless, eight or nine cars with students arrived at school by 7:30 a.m. Tuesday morning.

"It's usually like downtown crossing here in the morning," laughed Collins. "So we did a pretty good job of notifying almost everyone."

Village momentum

It wasn't so long ago that Mariner stories described Cohasset Village with words like "beleaguered" and "struggling." We clearly remember the days when a key anchor, like Colonial Pharmacy, closed leaving a void and an increasing sense that the village was on its last legs.

But thanks to the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce, Village Renaissance Committee, Village Revitalization Committee and subsequently the Village Revitalization Task Force — the village is alive and kicking. That's also due to the many merchants and businesses that have stuck it out or moved in because they have faith in the place.

And now, a couple of local businessmen with vision plan to ante up some serious money to get plans rolling for village and harbor improvements that include new lighting, sidewalks, underground utility lines and a harbor walkway.

To top it off, the planning board is pushing to have a village station reconsidered as plans to restore the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad pick up steam.

We agree that it's time to revisit the village station issue. It's time to take a serious look at whether that is the best choice. Let's find out by talking with the MBTA and checking out other towns that have rail service and village stops.

What a shame it would be years down the road as the train whizzes through town, for people to wonder why the town missed the opportunity to have a downtown station as more business heads to the highway.

Also, we don't think the village station question is a popularity issue to be decided at the ballot box. It's time for selectmen to make that decision after study and reflection on the merits of what's best for Cohasset and not on which way the political winds are blowing.

What's the hurry?

Please slow down out there in wintry road conditions — you know who you are! It never ceases to amaze us that those with SUVs don't understand that the laws of physics apply to them too. SUVs don't' perform any better in slick conditions than regular cars do. Four-wheel drive may be great for rough terrain. But all Rt. 3A requires is a little common sense and common courtesy for those of us driving old-fashioned vehicles in snow and sleet.

Police manning issues clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

In reference to the comments made by a selectman in last week's Mariner Newspaper regarding minimum manning and staffing levels at the Cohasset Police Department, we feel compelled to inform the citizens of the town of Cohasset as to our position on this.

Although it is nice to think that nothing really goes on in Cohasset, we know this to be untrue. Although Cohasset is relatively free of "street crime," there are still many other types of crimes and other incidents occurring 24 hours a day, 365 days a year that require a police response. As you may have noticed in the other articles in the Mariner last week, your police department recently responded to numerous accidents, a bank robbery and many other calls for service. Most recently, a marijuana growing operation was discovered in a residence. As you can see, things do happen here. Unfortunately, it is impossible for the suggested minimum of two police officers to safely or effectively deal with any of this.

Many of the calls for service that your police department receives, require the response of at a minimum, two officers. Occasionally, three or more officers are required to handle some situations. Calls such as domestic disputes, accidents, assaults, suspicious persons, etc., require two officers. Although it may seem that the two officers on duty can handle any of these calls by themselves, we all must ask ourselves some serious questions. Questions like: What happens when the department has multiple incidents occurring at the same time, and who is going to respond to these incidents? It should come as no surprise that officers respond to the situations that I described above on a daily basis in Cohasset. As Chief Noonan was quoted in your article, "Three officers is not excessive."

Some may suggest that the police should rely upon what is known as mutual aid from surrounding police departments in these situations. The problem with that idea is that mutual aid is meant to be as the word says, mutual. That means that we are expected to provide mutual aid to surrounding departments as often as they provide it to us. In addition, the mutual aid concept is designed to be used in cases of extreme emergency such as serious crowd situations, etc. It is not designed to supplement understaffing of a police department.

In closing, we would like to say that we are here to serve you 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. We work hard, long hours on nights, weekends and holidays when most people are off and spending time with their families. Our police chief, Brian Noonan, is working hard to see to it that the citizens of Cohasset receive the same level of police service offered in other cities and towns. It takes patrol, investigative and administrative positions to make the entire department work. In all of those capacities, we work together to provide you with the best police service possible. Please don't settle for substandard police service. Although often not thought of until something happens, your protection and our ability to prevent and solve crimes should be of paramount importance in any person's life. The remarks made by a member of the Board of Selectmen were naive. We ask that you, the citizens of Cohasset and the members of the Board of Selectmen, take into account what we have just mentioned and make your decisions based upon real world scenarios and let common sense guide you so that we may continue to provide you with excellent police service and that we, too, may go home to our families safely at the end of our shifts. To the other members of the Board of Selectman and the Town Manager who have supported us and our police chief's latest initiatives to enhance police service in Cohasset, we thank you.

On behalf of the men and women of the Cohasset Police Association

Shellee Peters, Vice President

Call firefighters

OFFICE OF SELECTMEN:

I have recently read that the position of Call Firefighters is in question. I support retaining this dedicated group of men.

About 28 years ago, our home was struck by lightning and caught on fire. Cliff Dickson, a call firefighter, was the first to arrive. A television set in the kitchen had blown up and the plastic smoke was so thick we were unable to rescue our dog who was sleeping there. Somehow Cliff reached her and carried her to safety. This was a long time ago, but the memory is still vivid to me.

The same storm struck the Beal's home on Virginia Lane. No one was home at the time and the house burned to the ground. When fires occur simultaneously, which is not uncommon in a lightning storm, call firefighters can be especially helpful if there is a delay in receiving mutual aid from other towns. Many homes in Cohasset have long driveways and are set back in wooded areas. Surely help is needed to lay out lengths of hose to reach these fires. I realize the fire department is larger now, but so is the town. Fortunately, we have very few fires, but when one strikes, I believe we need all the help we can get.

COHASSET CARES

Sleepless in Cohasset

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I had been sleepless anyway, I'm not sure why. Maybe it was that unsettling telephone conversation with the parent about trying to start recycling at the high school. Maybe it was the phone message about the possibility of students doing some social work. Maybe it was the sermon on Martin Luther King Jr. — about strength and frailty — or the awkwardness singing "We Shall Overcome." The question of how people up there in Live Free or Die-land would be celebrating the holiday kept bothering me.

Maybe it was the reverberations caused in our family circle by my step-daughter leaving her comfortable job at Harvard for a new career as a social worker — her telling us about everyday homemade atrocities that she sees while we were there enjoying the exquisite delicacies at Bernard's, celebrating her 28th birthday.

Maybe it was the conversation of a few days ago about the man who chose not to live in Cohasset, he said, because he didn't want his kids raised with the values rampant here.

Or the planning we're involved in starting the discussion group on voluntary simplicity and Duane Elgin's book, kind of scary, unsettling at least, especially to a packrat and as much a lover of things as the next red-blooded American.

The RTF [Recycling Transfer Facility] committee meeting itself, being amongst those dedicated salt-of-the-earth volunteers, and learning about, for example, the load of Cohasset crushed glass that was declared contaminated and had to be discarded — that is, wasted — because of one piece of ceramic discovered in the load. Or the thought of RTF manager Dickie's retirement in early spring.

Or maybe it was the Cohasset Fire Department truck and ambulance that arrived next door last night with lights flashing in the wee hours of the freezing morning ...

Or maybe, most immediately, it was because I had been watching a portion of Kurt Russell's "Soldier," a chilling sci-fi search for more efficient methods of achieving violence ...

I had every intention of continuing my PAYT [Pay As You Throw]/buck-a-bag series here . . . but then perhaps I am. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

Do you think a village station would help or harm the village?

"Depending on the mix of businesses it brings, I think it could definitely help the downtown area. It would focus foot traffic in the area and make it a place to stop for conveniences. Parking would be my only concern. The town lot is already insufficient."

— Mary Kindle, 49 Elm St.

"I think it would be a huge mess. I don't know how they're planning to design the thing. I do think it would be good for business, though."

— Phil Rose, manager of Cohasset Hardware

"I think it would help us with parking. The T would get us more parking, which we really need. I've already noticed a pickup in people getting excited about shopping locally."

— Sue Straley, owner of Cards and Shards

"I think it would be great. The transportation downtown is zilch."

—Joanne Young, 264 N. Main St.

"I think it would help. Anything that brings people to the village would be beneficial. People who may not necessarily drive here could take the train and make a day of it. Keeping businesses in the village also helps the town as a whole because of the taxes paid to the town."

— Jen Peterson, co-owner of Really Great Pizza, with daughter Hannah

"I imagine it would help out business a little bit, but I think it would kill some people's property values."

— John Scott, owner of Cohasset News

Sex, drugs and the candidates

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Gee, here we are at the New Hampshire primary already and not a single important issue has emerged.

Oh, discussions, even arguments, have flared over tax cuts and health care and education and the like but I'm talking about the real issues — like sex and drugs.

Think of it, the 2000 presidential campaign has been going on for a better part of a year and no one has yet found George Bush's signature on a motel register or Al Gore's name on a drug dealer's list of customers.

Either the candidates have gone goody-goody on us or the media ain't really trying.

It wasn't that long ago, the spring of '92 to be exact, when we were awash in the sordid details of what the Democratic candidate, Bill Clinton, did to Gennifer, just in time for the New Hampshire primary.

It wasn't that long ago, the spring of '96 to be exact, that we were smothered in the details of what Bill tried to do to Paula during that fateful and costly meeting in the Hotel Excelsior in Little Rock.

Either the candidates have gone goody-goody on us or the media ain't really trying.

Now all we have is Bush dangling before us the prospect of our actually getting money back from the IRS and Gore promising to do something about the inadequacy of our health care system.

In truth, wouldn't you rather read, as we did in the spring of '88, about Gary Hart and Donna Rice and the hi-jinx aboard the good shop "Monkey Business' while the senator's wife was out of town?

And Gary's challenge to the Miami Herald to put a reportorial tail on him to checks for wrong-doing. The Herald did and turned up Donna entering Gary's Washington town house and not leaving until after sunup.

There was a campaign issue the voter could sink his teeth into.

The best that can be said about the 2000 campaign in George Bush's acknowledgment that he may have done something untoward in his youth 30 years ago but he wasn't telling what and no one has been able to find out.

The 1988 campaign was a hot bed of crucial issues even before Mike Dukakis recommended Beligan endives as a cash crop of Iowa farmers and George H.W. Bush discovered Willie Horton.

That was the year some crusading reporter, counting on his fingers, figured that candidate Pat Robertson's first child was born less than the required nine months before he and his wife were married.

That's the Reverend Pat Robertson, the born-again Christian.

Another reverend, Jesse Jackson, who was running for the Democratic presidential nomination that year, was queried about his sex life, to which his wife, Jacqueline, replied:

"I am not a slave master over his body or his commitment and neither is he over mine."

Marijuana has not played the same role in Campaign 2000 that it did in previous races since just about everyone has admitted torching a toke now then when he was young and foolish.

It's a car cry from the day when Doug Ginsburg, a Reagan nominee for the Supreme Court, confessed that he occasionally lit up as a student and again as a professor at Harvard Law School.

Maybe the time has arrived when Bill Clinton will find it safe to acknowledge that he really did inhale after all.

CANDIDATES CORNER

Maureen Devine to seek Murray's seat

Maureen Devine has officially announced her candidacy for the office of State Representative from the third Plymouth District. Devine, a resident of Hingham for more than 10 years and of the South Shore for 15 years, is a member of the Republican Town Committee. She is in her fifth year of elected office as a member of Hingham School Committee.

Devine became active in town affairs upon moving to Hingham, with regular appearances at school committee and selectmen's meetings while heading school PTOs, organizing fund-raisers and volunteering in school, library and other town endeavors. She was awarded the Plymouth County Education Association Distinguished Service Recognition Award in 1993. This activism led to a run for school committee in 1995 where Devine was the top vote-getter among candidates for all offices. She ran unopposed in 1998.

During her time on the school committee, Devine has been known as an outspoken advocate for quality education and responsible spending. Though agreeing that the town's aging school physical plant was in need of rehabilitation, Devine has consistently emphasized that what is going on inside the buildings is what matters. Her work as a committee member in developing an annual budget for the school department has enhanced her understanding of how wide-ranging needs are balanced against the constraints of limited funding. Decreasing reliance on local taxpayers by increasing state aid, particularly for state-mandated programs and reforms, remains a priority. Devine is the parent of two boys, 16 and 13 who attend the Hingham schools. Her interest in public education is both civic and personal.

Maureen Devine

Devine was an assistant district attorney in Middlesex and Plymouth counties for five years and supervised the Juvenile Prosecution unit. For the past 10 years, she has been in private practice as a trial attorney principally in the probate and family court and district court divisions. Devine has undergraduate and graduate degrees from Fordham University in New York City and a J.D. from Suffolk University Law School. She holds permanent certification in New York and Connecticut as a special education teacher in grades K-12.

Although Devine resides in Hingham, through friendships and business ties, she is no stranger to the towns of Hull and Cohasset. She believes the impressive resources of these communities must be preserved for their residents today and in the future. She knows all three towns share a need to maintain a sense of stability, safety and prosperity. Moreover, the residents share many of the concerns of all Massachusetts citizens, including:

- Access to dependable and affordable health care.
- Assurance of accountability and safety in their schools.
- Confidence that their elected officials will spend responsibly.

Devine acknowledges that following in the footsteps of Mary Jeanette Murray, whose 24 years of selfless service to her constituents will never be forgotten, is a daunting task. She is confident, however, that her own lifetime of diverse experience and outspoken commitment to the public interest will serve her well.

Grand plans are floated for Cohasset village and harbor to put utility lines underground in the village, harbor, and on Cohasset Common.

While many of the business owners and town leaders present last Wednesday night had heard of the Chamber's goals of creating a harbor walkway and improving the village, the idea of putting utility lines underground is a new addition to the project.

Rizzo demonstrated the aesthetic changes made possible with underground utility lines by showing pictures of the village, harbor, and Common and comparing the pictures to enhanced versions in which utility lines had been digitally removed.

"You don't realize how much the lines obstruct the view until you see what's possible with them removed," Rizzo said.

The VRTF has drafted a warrant article for the March annual town meeting to fund the $5.5 million project. The article would increase utility costs by two percent for a minimum of 20 years, the amount of time necessary to pay back utility companies Eastern Edison, Bell Atlantic, and Media One, who would front the costs of putting their lines underground.

The first step in the $2.5 million of planned village improvements will be taken in early spring, when the $170,000 St. Stephen's Walkway project will be put out for bids by construction companies.

The VRTF received a $165,900 grant for the project in May 1998, after an initial investment by the town of $10,000 to develop construction and engineering plans for the grant application. Rizzo said similar opportunities for state and federal funding are possible for other segments of the village and harbor project.

"A lot of people think we're this rich little town and we won't get any state or federal money, but that's totally not the case," he said. "If we do this right, we can achieve these goals with minimal investments by the town. We can duplicate the effort with the sidewalk."

Rizzo said a number of public meetings would be held in February and March about the walkway, which is slated to begin at the corner of South Main Street and Robert E. Jason Road, just off of the town common.

The granite ledge in front of St. Stephen's Church will be cut back in order to create a four to five foot-wide red brick walkway, which will go in front of the Independence Building (soon to be home to the Cohasset Greenery) and will extend to the corner of Elm Street, where trees, plantings, and an esplanade are planned.

The Chamber plans to spend $65,000 of the $200,000 it has raised for the overall village/harbor project to develop engineering and design plans for village improvements. The $65,000 would pay for traffic and parking analyses, lighting, sidewalk, and landscape design, as well as the 25 percent design drawings required for additional funding in most grant applications.

Ordelheide, whose renovated Red Lion Inn is likely to bring new business to the village, said improvements in the downtown business district are long overdue.

"I want to rebeautify the village, that's the thing to do," said Ordelheide. "I've been all over the world, and Cohasset is one of the nicest places I have been. I love the village. I loved it when I first came here in 1987. But it needs work. We can change the whole view of the village and make it a beautiful town center."

Rizzo, Roy, and other Chamber members met last week with officials from the Army Corps of Engineers to discuss prospects for permitting the harbor walkway project.

Originally, Rizzo had developed three cost options for a harbor walkway, ranging from $1 million to $5.5 million. After discussing the project with the Army Corps, Roy said a medium-cost option of about $2.5 million seemed the most reasonable.

"The first thing you have to do with a project like this is to have a vision and think big," Roy said. "Eventually, you have to edit those big thoughts. From our conversations, it seems the harbor walk would be appropriately sized at $2.5 million. I believe we can get the permits by the end of the year. If we line up the financing, this thing really can happen."

The Chamber plans to use $55,000 of its $200,000 in "seed money" to develop engineering designs for priority areas along the harbor walkway, which is slated to include new brick sidewalks, granite curbs, and guardrails, as well as a number of trees and benches along the harbor.

Roy said he is committed to the project and is willing to donate substantial amounts of money to make it a reality. He said members of the Chamber of commerce must be willing to put the plans into action.

"Talk is cheap," he said. "We need to make this happen. Some of these things are going to happen if I have to do them myself. Like Gerd Ordelheide, I've been all over the world, and Cohasset still hold a special place in my heart as well. I think we can make a real difference in this town."

Ordelheide said the village's other business owners will eventually need to join he and Roy in donating money to the project.

"We expect money of you," he told the assembled Chamber of Commerce members. "We're going to have to address some kind of contribution."

Rizzo said a number of public meetings will be held to discuss the entire village/harbor project. With Ordelheide and Roy on board, he said the time is now to capitalize on the project's newfound momentum.

"It's a rare occurrence to have such important business owners willing to contribute," Rizzo said. "But we need a unified effort. We need town officials and residents to get behind the project as well. We want to hear good comments as well as bad ones."

Business will reside in Independence Building in the store to put them."

Brown had been looking more toward Plymouth and Duxbury for a place to expand her business before her husband stumbled upon the Independence Building after going to lunch in Cohasset.

"He went down to the Silver Spoon Cafe and saw the 'For Rent' sign on the front of the building," Brown said. "He started peeking in the windows and he told me about it. I came down and saw it and I loved it."

Independence Building owner Tom Koncius bought the structure from the town in June for $100,100 and had planned on making it a single-family residence. He said he received more correspondence from interested businesses than he did from those wishing to use the building as a residence.

"It's a mixed-use building, so we could go either way," Koncius said. "We hadn't put the kitchen in yet. Ellen's business seemed like a good match."

Built into the ledge just below St. Stephen's, the Independence Building has a past as storied as nearly any building in town.

The 150-year old building got its name from its initial use as the home of Independence Fire Company No. 1, which housed the town's first, hand-pumped fire engine.

The building was converted into the town's first police station in 1913, when the fire station moved to the Cove. The police station remained in the Independence Building until 1962, when the town opened up the joint police and fire station still in use on Elm Street.

Since 1962, the Independence Building has been home to a law office, gown museum, and the town's teen center. The building had become dilapidated in recent years, but Koncius' pride in the structure is evident after only a few months of ownership.

A new cupola was installed atop the building in September, and some of the old red brick on the front, which had been painted white, has been exposed once again. Brown is excited about the new location, which includes two jail cells on the first floor, remnants of its days as the town police station.

"We're thinking about fun ways to use the cells," she said. "We might put candies in one and cards in the other. We're not quite sure yet. We're going to use the whole building and probably do more antiques and gifts than we do in Hingham because we'll have more space."

A lifelong resident of Hingham, Brown is a member of the Hingham Merchants Association and has operated the Hingham Greenery on South Street for 12 years. She hopes the practices which have enabled her store to flourish in Hingham will ensure similar success in Cohasset.

"The key since we've been here has been customer service, and we hope to bring that special touch to Cohasset," she said.

While Brown liked the Independence Building and was excited about its possibilities as a home for her expanded business, another factor which convinced her to come to Cohasset was the Chamber of Commerce's plan for village improvements.

"Cohasset Village is really turning around," Brown said. "I went to last week's meeting at Atlantica and there seems to be a really positive feeling among business owners about improving the village. It's a great time to be coming in."

Brown's business will directly benefit from the first phase of the village improvement project. The St. Stephen's Walkway, which will be constructed with a $165,900 grant from the Massachusetts Area Planning Council, goes right in front of the Independence Building.

Though ledge will have to be cleared in front of St. Stephen's, a four to five foot-wide red brick sidewalk will be created, along with granite curbs and plantings.

The work is scheduled to be completed by December, and Brown is excited by the possibility of a new look outside her store's front door.

"There's all this important stuff going on in the village, and the first project directly affects us," she said. "It's great."

Brown is hoping to get her new location ready in time for a planned open house on Feb. 6, which would allow the business to attract customers for Valentine's Day. She will work primarily in the Cohasset location for a while, trusting her Hingham store to longtime manager Richard Lynch of Milton.

All new paint, ceilings, and hardwood floors have been put in since Brown signed her lease for the new store on Dec. 10. She said the Cohasset Greenery will offer something different from the Hingham location.

"We want to keep the stores different, so our loyal customers can find things they like at both places," she said. "We're really looking forward to increasing our wedding and function work in the Cohasset location, especially with the Red Lion Inn nearby."

Call firefighters state their case

tracts with the professional firefighters. Those contracts preclude call firefighters from working aboard fire engines.

Pratt said call firefighters have been performing important functions for years without working on the fire engines.

"I've been doing this for 40 years, and 25 or 30 years ago is the last time we operated fire apparatus," Pratt said.

Hull resident Joseph Gagne, who works in Cohasset, came to the selectmen's meeting in support of the call firefighters. His life was saved last year when CPR was administered by call firefighters before paramedics could arrive on the scene.

"Mr. Gagne was in full arrest and two call firefighters got there and did CPR on him for five minutes until an ambulance arrived," Pratt said. "We do make a difference, and we still can make a difference."

Gagne stood up and addresses selectmen, saying $30,000 is a small price to pay for a group trained in life-saving techniques.

"I'm alive nine months on Sunday because of two of these young men," Gagne said. "If you can find a better way to spend $30,000, show me."

Haddad said he does not question the service which call firefighters provide to the residents of Cohasset. He said he simply needed to cut somewhere to help offset the costs of the new firefighter/paramedics.

"I understand the value of the call department, but the issue right now is purely financial," Haddad said. "I wanted to cut back on callbacks last year, but the board rejected that proposal. The town appropriated money for four firefighter/paramedics for the last fiscal year, and now we have to figure out how to pay for the service this year."

Selectman Thomas Callahan reiterated his suggestion made two weeks ago, saying the call force could continue as a volunteer department.

MacNeill said he would do the job for free, but said taking away the group's funding shows a lack of support from selectmen.

"I'm one of those who would do this with no remuneration," he said. "But by making us volunteers, you're telling us that we must not have any value."

Selectman Diane Sullivan suggesting cutting the pool for call firefighters in half, to $15,000.

"I think we need a call force, but I'll admit we may need a reduction in the amount we spend on it," Sullivan said. "We pay crazy amounts for different studies, and these people are willing to risk their lives and go into a burning building. You can't put a price on that."

Sullivan made a motion to reduce the fund for call firefighters to $15,000. Because Haddad has proposed eliminating the department altogether in his budget, selectmen would have to find $15,000 somewhere else in the proposed budget to support Sullivan's motion.

The motion was defeated 3-2, with selectmen Merle Brown, Ronnie McMorris, and Callahan voting against. The vote did not mean the end of the call department, as McMorris said she was reluctant to approve the motion until selectmen looked at the budget further.

"Until we know where the $15,000 is coming from, we can't say where we're going to take it," she said.

Most of the money could be found in the budget if the town does not receive a federal grant to fund a new police officer position. The COPS grant would cover 75 percent of the officer's salary for three years, leaving a cost to the town of only $14,000 for FY 2001. Selectmen approved the request conditional on the town receiving the grant. If the town doesn't receive the grant, the $14,000 could be used for the call fire department.

Sullivan doesn't think the town will stand for the elimination of the call fire department either way.

"I think people in this town are going to scream their heads off over this and I think they should," she said.

Stars of the Week

Greg O'Connell tallied two goals and two assists, and Jay Rasmussen also scored twice to lead the Cohasset High hockey team to a 7-4 win over Randolph.

Gymnasts break 120

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Without a doubt, this is the definitive week for the Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team. C/N is coming off a season-high score against Scituate with some definite momentum built in the Pilgrim Conference 2. The C/N girls will need as strong or stronger performances the rest of the week to stay in the PC2 hunt.

Having registered its highest score of the season Monday night against a rejuvenated Scituate High team in a 126.6-120.4 loss to the Lady Sailors, C/N was scheduled to face two tough teams in Hingham and Randolph in a tri-meet on Wednesday.

"They're doing better than I ever anticipated."
Ruthann Ardizzoni

Things weren't expected to become any easier with Hanover on tap for Thursday evening. Both meets begin at 8:30 p.m. at the Head over Heels club in Norwell.

What was especially encouraging about the high score against Gina Verge and the deep Scituate team was the fact that C/N rebounded nicely from a sluggish 112.5-98.1 decision over Carver. That meet had few bright spots despite the lopsided score.

Kristin Sheerin, of course, continued to light up the gym with victories on the bars (8.2), beam (8.1) and floor (8.7). Meredith Bixby nailed down second with her bar routine and took a second on the vault and third with her floor exercise, posting scores of 7.6 and 7.4, respectively.

The always-consistent Carlie Carter was second on the beam and secured second with her floor routine, posting a 7.9.

The Scituate meet, though, brought out the very best in C/N. "We were pushing for a 120 after a 112 meet," said head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni. "We usually rise up to an occasion like that because we have nothing to lose."

Verge, the best gymnast in the Pilgrim Conference, showed she was fully recovered from a painful back injury by posting a scintillating 35.9 on the all-around for first place. Verge was also unstoppable on the bars (9.1), beam (9.0) and floor (9.4). Sheerin broke up a Verge first-place sweep by tying the Scituate sensation with an 8.4 on the vault.

Carter was third on the bars with her 8.15 and set a personal best on the vault in 7.9.

"They're doing better than I ever anticipated," said Ardizzoni on Monday evening. "Hopefully tomorrow night we'll do well. It would be nice to come away with two wins."

In its annual meet against Notre Dame of Hingham, C/N posted an easy 118.1-110.85 over a much-improved ND team.

Sheerin dominated the competition by taking the all-around (33.75) and sweeping the four events. ND's Siobhan Hart, a Cohasset resident, put together a strong meet with a second in the all around and floor (8.55), and third on the bars (7.0).

Sheerin registered marks of 8.4 on the bars and 7.7 on the vault before nailing a shining 8.9 on the beam to go along with her floor routine score of 8.75. Carter finished second on bars with an 8.1 and picked up a pair of thirds on the beam and floor with her 7.85 and 8.05, respectively.

Skaters throw a scare in Bulldogs

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The scoreboard was about the only thing working at Rockland Rink last Saturday. It's a good thing too, because judging solely by the reaction of the two teams, it would have been difficult to figure out who won and who lost.

"We're not really gelling," said Rockland coach Barry Parker after his team came away with a 5-3 win over Cohasset. "We were only up one goal going into the third period."

The Skippers had gone out and given it their all, and for that their coaches were grateful.

"I'm very happy with the way we played," said Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh. "We played well enough to win. The ice hurt us."

The Zamboni machine was broken at the rink, and the ice was not cleaned for the entire game. Midway though the second period, the two teams were playing in slush for the rest of the game.

With the score tied 3-3, the Bulldogs were able to pull away when Billy Stewart completed his hat trick with a blast from just inside the blue line.

"Our goals are coming from the outside," said Parker. "We don't score from the inside. Four out of our five goals were from the outside. We had another one on a breakaway."

Walsh saw a different club on this day.

"This is a huge improvement," said Walsh. "The first time we played, we lost, 7-2. We moved the puck around well today."

Rockland took a 1-0 lead on Stewart's first goal less than three minutes into the game. Cohasset answered and actually took a 2-1 lead. Jay Rasmussen scored to tie it up with an assist from Greg O'Connell, and then just a minute and half later Will Moody scored for the lead with five minutes left in the period.

Just over four minutes into the second period, Rockland knotted the score again at 2-2 on Stewart's second goal. Mike Celestino and Eric Haapaoja both assisted. Just over a minute later, it was Sean McElaney putting one in for a 3-2 advantage over the Skippers. Rasmussen responded with over eight minutes remaining in the second period to knot the score at 3-3.

After Stewart's hat trick put the Bulldogs ahead, Rockland added another in the third period as Haapaoja gave Rockland some breathing room to account for the 5-3 final. McElaney was credited with an assist.

The Bulldogs are a combination of experience and youth, and at 6-4-1, are hoping to make a push for the postseason.

"We're a young team," said Parker. "We have four freshmen and an eighth grader skating a regular shift."

Rockland's slump extended back a game to a match-up with the rival Abington-East Bridgewater team. The two squads battled to a 4-4 tie.

"We made a lot of mental mistakes," said Parker. "We weren't gelling in that game either."

McElaney scored a pair of goals, while Stewart and Haapaoja each added one.

Cohasset is a long shot to make the tournament this year, but will continue to play for the future. The Skippers defeated Randolph, 7-4 as O'Connell tallied two goals and two assists, and Rasmussen also scored twice.

"We're a young team," said Walsh. "We have a line with two freshmen and a junior. Half of our team is freshmen. We're getting the effort that we're looking for."

Rockland's was scheduled to play Hanover last night, while Cohasset had its Tuesday night game with Scituate postponed, and was scheduled to play the Sailors last night.

Wrestlers learning fast

Technically, this is supposed to be a rebuilding year for the Cohasset High wrestling team.

Try telling that to the 10 other teams competing in the ninth annual Cohasset High wrestling tournament last Saturday. The Skippers made their presence felt, racking up 114 points en route to a fourth place finish.

"This was right about where I thought we'd be," said coach Torin Sweeney. "It would have been nice to finish a little higher, but Lynnfield overtook us."

"The younger kids wrestled well. They've been coming along. There's a lot of work to do still."
Torin Sweeney

Lynnfield finished strong for a total of 117 points to grab third. Marshfield had 167 points to win the title, followed by Norwell, which had 130.

Although in the past the Skippers would have contended for the title, this year's showing was still a promising one.

"The younger kids wrestled well," said Sweeney. "They've been coming along. There's a lot of work to do still."

Chris Pratt defeated Ray Shalhoub of Middleboro, 7-1, at 125. Liam O'Donnell won 7-1 over Jim Tribble of Scituate at 160 to take the title. Joe Carbone took second at 215.

In other action, Kevin DeVito was third at 171, Daniel Littauer was third at 140, Brian Litchfield was third at 145, and Patrick Carbone was fourth at 135.

Cohasset was scheduled to wrestle Hull last night, and will face Wayland, Whitman-Hanson and Durfee on Saturday.

'Tribute in Brass' to perform

"Tribute in Brass," a nine-piece brass ensemble from Eastern Nazarene College (ENC) in Quincy, will perform a concert of sacred music Sunday, Jan. 30, at Beechwood Congregational Church. The concert, sponsored by Sunday Nights at Beechwood Church, located at 51 Church St. in Cohasset, will be held at 7 p.m. The event is open to the public. An offering will be collected to help defray the costs of the concert.

The ensemble was formed in 1997 by director Chris Boel. The group consists of three trumpets, French horn, two trombones, tuba, piano and synthesizer, and percussion. "Tribute in Brass" performs in concert at churches, schools and other events.

Even before excellent instrumental performance, however, the ensemble is committed to helping its audiences to worship. The concert will be interspersed with scripture and with the testimonies of various members. Members of the group are a combination of students from Eastern Nazarene College and local alumni/ae. Director Chris Boel is a graduate of ENC, receiving his BA in Trumpet Performance, and serves on the music department faculty.

Eastern Nazarene College is a fully accredited, coeducational, Christian liberal arts college, offering more than 50 traditional undergraduate programs, as well as a broad array of programs in the non-traditional format for working adults. In 2000, ENC begins a year-long celebration of its centennial, an institution dedicated to providing high quality education to students from many different Christian denominations and backgrounds in an atmosphere which fosters service to God, the church and the world.

Beechwood Congregational Church was established in 1863. Dr. Branson Roberts has been the pastor since September, 1998.

Chinese New Year benefit is Feb. 5

To celebrate the Year of the Dragon, the Cohasset Parent School Organization is throwing a Chinese New Year benefit Feb. 5 from 7 to 11 p.m. at the St. Stephen's ballroom.

Auction 2000 — a Chinese New Year Experience, coincides with the centuries-old Chinese New Year. Come join the celebration and be transported to another time and place. Traditional decorations from Chinatown and food from Beijing House in Norwell will be a feast for your eyes and your palate. To ring in the New Year, a traditional "Lion Dance" will be performed for the crowd. Adding to the festivities is DJ Chris Pickett, who will play a variety of popular music for all to enjoy.

There will be more than 120 items to be auctioned, as well as a raffle for 16 gift baskets of varying themes, and fortune cookies with an added surprise. The proceeds from Auction 2000 will go to benefit curriculum enrichment and teacher grant programs. Tickets for the event are $25 and may be purchased by any PSO Executive Board member or by calling Marie Kelly at 383-1924.

ENCORE! Concert

It's ENCORE! time again! The pops-style choral concert is being presented by the Unicorn Singers and Broad Cove Chorale Feb. 5 and 6 at the beautiful new parish hall at St. Anthony's in Cohasset. Saturday's performance is at 8 p.m., and Sunday the concert begins at 4 p.m.

ENCORE! usually sells out before opening night; patrons are urged to get their tables for 10 together immediately! Highlights of this year's concert will be staged and costumed medleys from "Nunsense" and "Secret Garden," and a choreographed dance number with hats guaranteed to amuse and delight.

ENCORE! reprises many of the two choral groups' best-loved selections from their popular fall galas, and combines a great variety of music (classical, spirituals, folk songs, close harmony, madrigals, jazz, barbershop, opera and Broadway) with humorous, original segments written especially for the group.

Patrons are encouraged to purchase reserved tables for 10 at $135, and to bring a festive picnic to enjoy during the concert (please no alcoholic beverages this year, at the request of the parish committee). To share a table, the cost is $15/seat, and your party will be seated with another group. At Sunday's matinee, seniors and students may attend for $10. Seats will probably not be available at the door; tickets should be bought from members of either chorus, or by mail. Send a check and self-addressed stamped envelope to Broad Cove Chorale, 66 Lincoln St., Hingham 02043 (be sure to indicate choice of performance). After Feb. 2, call first for availability: 749-6561.

SAFE to target landfill regulations at town meeting

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE) wants to say goodbye to landfills in Cohasset forever. To that end, SAFE is hoping to convince residents to approve three citizens' articles that would make it nearly impossible for a new landfill to open in Cohasset. The three articles would change local zoning and health regulations in an effort to prevent environmental contamination and health hazards from new landfills.

The first article SAFE is presenting would change a light industrial zone on Route 3A to a new classification: technology business. The technology business zone would prohibit manufacturing, residential homes and landfills. Allowed uses in the new zone would include biotechnology and technology research, and electronic and high-tech assembly businesses.

"The zoning article is the silver bullet to stop landfills in that district," McNabb said. "State law prevents us from prohibiting a landfill in an industrial district. This is the only way to prohibit landfills under zoning."

McNabb said the district affected by the article is the same one SAFE targeted unsuccessfully for a zoning change at last year's town meeting. Some people objected to last year's article because it would have allowed residential homes by special permit in the proposed zone. McNabb said SAFE listened to the objections against last year's article, and crafted a new zoning proposal for the annual town meeting scheduled for this spring.

"This article would not allow residential housing with a special permit, but it would allow bio-tech research like Kevin Ulmer is doing with Pavonis, and electronic assembly," McNabb said. "We're more likely to attract a computer assembly operation than a heavy manufacturing company. This is the same district we tried to change last year, on the east side of Route 3A where Marylou's News and the cellular telephone tower are located."

McNabb said some people have objected that changing the zoning on Route 3A is too extreme. But the only way for the town to prevent new landfills in the Route 3A zone is to change the zoning, McNabb countered. He added that the town would still have two industrial zones, one that includes the Hagerty property and another along Route 3A. The Hagerty zone is bounded by coastline, and the other 3A site is surrounded by wetlands, making both locations unsuitable for landfills.

The Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill would not be able to claim pre-existing status in the new zone because it does not currently have a valid special permit. Even if the state lifts the current moratorium on landfills, CHL would not achieve pre-existing status because it would need to acquire a special permit before the planning board holds it first hearing on the article. McNabb said the planning board would probably hold its first hearing in March. CHL has issued a notice of project change for its landfill to open a new facility on the site of the old location. CHL cannot act on that proposal because of the moratorium and legal problems related to the old landfill, which closed last July.

The second article would require the board of health to expand its methods for informing the public about any company applying for a site assignment in Cohasset. McNabb said he helped craft this article based on some work he's done for a citizen's group in Abington that is trying to a new transfer station from opening in that town. McNabb helped the citizen's group through his employer, Clean Water Action of Boston.

Under state law, a board of health must publish only one small notice in the legal section of a local newspaper when a company applies for a site assignment. The state's home rule law allows cities and towns to pass laws and regulations more stringent than state rules.

The Cohasset bylaw, if approved, would require the Cohasset Board of Health to conduct a stringent public notification and hearing process for site assignments. The health board would have to determine whether the site for any proposed landfill would pose a danger to public health and safety. The board of health would have to post a large sign at the proposed location indicating the proposed use, place large display ads in local newspapers, conduct a preliminary public hearing seven days before the site assignment hearing, videotape all proceedings, notify all residents by first class mail if they live within one mile of the facility, and accept written public comments. In addition, 10 or more residents from Cohasset or an abutting town can petition the board of health to investigate alleged legal or environmental violations at existing landfills, and determine whether to rescind the violator's site assignment. The burden of proof would be on the landfill owner to prove that the site is suitable, or that no violations exist.

"The purpose of this article is to preserve the people's rights to clean air and water, and their right to petition their government to address grievances," McNabb said. "I went to the Internet and looked for situations where communities implemented maximum notification measures for other situations. Citizens groups have done this before in many other communities."

McNabb said he wants to implement a process that allows citizens to address environmental threats quickly.

"In 1998, it took SAFE six months to get the board of health to meet and hold site assignment hearings about CHL," McNabb said. "It was like pulling teeth up to that point. I want to set up a preliminary process that doesn't intrude on existing laws."

The third article would prohibit the board of health from issuing a site assignment in the town's water resource district. The town created the water resource district in 1986. About one-third of CHL sits within the district. CHL was exempt from the water resource district regulations, which prohibit landfills, because it was a pre-existing use in operation before the town created the protected area.

In 1998 and 1999, McNabb, vice president of SAFE, discovered that CHL's owners had failed to file a special permit with the county when they bought the landfill. Failure to file the special permit meant that CHL could not claim pre-existing status in the water resource district. Only businesses that were in compliance with all legal regulations at the time the town created the district can claim pre-existing status and exemptions.

In 1996, the board of health rejected CHL's request for a major expansion, citing seven criteria for the denial. The board of health did not cite the existence of the water resource district as one of the criteria for denying the expansion. McNabb said members of the board of health may have been wary of invoking the regulation because CHL had challenged the water resource district in court, and an appeal was still pending. The appeals court ultimately upheld the town's water resource district.

"There's nothing to prevent the board of health from invoking the water resource district now," McNabb said. "This is just an added protection."

DEP okays Scituate Hill water tank

McNabb said the commissioners voted to use their eminent domain authority to take .79 acres of land for an appraised cost of $52,500. The water commission acquired a permanent easement from Crocker II to build a 30-foot -wide access road to the tank. The pipe that delivers water to the town will run under the access road.

Members of the water commission say the town needs a new tank to take the other unit out of service for cleaning, and to provide more fire reserves for large fires or when water reserves drop below average levels in hot summer months.

In other water commission business, DEP awarded the town a $45,000 grant to prepare a comprehensive watershed protection plan for the Lily Pond watershed. McNabb aid the grant will allow Norfolk Environmental, the water commission's consultant, to study the watershed with an emphasis on land uses, local regulations, and potential threats to the town's water supply.

Chatterton is Citizen of the Year

Athletic director is honored with award

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Clark Chatterton's office is like Grand Central Station.

School administrators, teachers, coaches, custodians and students constantly hop in and out for updates and schedules, and with questions about where to put the latest trophy or with requests to use the telephone.

And the 58-year-old athletic director wouldn't have it any other way.

"What am I proudest of?" wondered Chatterton, who's been a fixture at the high school for 32 years. "In the last half-hour, about 15 different people have come in from custodians and bus drivers to the principal.

"I have a working relationship with all those people. One of my strengths is that I can work with anyone," he said.

But being easygoing, friendly and having the ability to tap into a memory that doesn't seem to forget anything — ranging from dozens of sports schedules to the names of graduates and their families — is only a small part of what makes Chatterton so special.

It is his generosity of spirit and deep caring for his fellow man that led to Chatterton being named the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year.

"You won't find it in his job description — all the things he does," said his brother-in-law, Dr. Roger Pompeo in his nomination

Village station debate put off

Selectmen will hear from planning board in March

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

"The planning board is saying there's a new issue to consider with the village revitalization. I want to make it clear that we're not having them at the meeting so we can make another vote."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

The idea of a village train station may currently be the hot topic of debate among residents, but selectmen will wait until March to hear the planning board's reasons for wanting the Greenbush commuter rail station located downtown.

Last month, the planning board voted 5-0 to bring the issue of a village station back to selectmen. In November 1996, selectmen voted to put the station at the site of the former Wintergarden Skating Rink on Route 3A.

The vote by selectmen came on the heels of a straw poll taken at the Oct. 1996 special town meeting, in which residents voted for the 3A station by a vote of 311-112.

The MBTA included a village train station in draft mitigation plans prior to Nov. 1996. Since the selectmen's vote, the MBTA has included the 3A station in all of its subsequent draft mitigation plans.

In a Jan. 25 letter to selectmen asking for a meeting to discuss the location of the commuter rail station, planning board chairman Al Moore said a village station could aid the

School user-fee policy has its first customer

Cancer society will pay to use track

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

In keeping with its new policy, the school committee will charge the American Cancer Society a flat fee for its use of school facilities for the annual Relay for Life walk in June.

The $150 fee covers use of the athletic field, cafeteria, restrooms and gym during the 24-hour event. The society will also pay for any custodial and maintenance costs incurred.

School committee member Pat Martin said the board was trying to stretch the dollar and be fair to all in light budgetary times.

"Someone has to pay for the wear and tear," Martin said.

The new policy came under fire last week by residents and representatives of the American Cancer Society who said the society could not pay a percentage-based fee for its Relay for Life at Alumni Field as the school board had initially intended.

Cohasset resident Shelly Donze, a cancer survivor, said the cancer society could not agree to share a percentage of the proceeds when people think the money they donate goes to support research and services for

Call firefighter funding nixed

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A paid call fire department will become a thing of the past in Cohasset.

After a contentious debate, selectmen voted 3-2 to stay within the limits of the FY 2001 budget proposed by Town Manager Mark Haddad and eliminate funding for the call force.

Selectmen Merle Brown, Tom Callahan, and Ronnie McMorris voted to cut funding for the call department, with Fred Koed and Diane Sullivan opposed.

Haddad has proposed using the $31,000 in funding for the call department to help offset the $188,685 cost in FY 2001 of the four firefighter/paramedics appropriated by voters at last December's special town meeting.

The $31,000 pool for call firefighters in FY 2000 is divided among the department's members depending upon the number of incidents each reports to.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said voters were not told funding would be cut for the call force as a result of appropriating the paramedics.

"It's simply a tough choice between paying the call force and having professional paramedics on board."
— Selectman Ronnie McMorris

"Nobody ever said we would get rid of the call firefighters to fund the paramedics," she said.

Haddad said he was simply looking for a way to help fund the paramedics with monies already allocated to the fire department.

"I wanted to lessen the impact of the paramedics on the overall operating budget," he said. "When I looked at how to pay for a new employee at the transfer station, I suggested increasing the RTF sticker fee. I try to minimize the effect of new initiatives on the town budget."

Ten of the town's 13 call firefighters came to last Tuesday's selectmen's meeting to explain their duties to selectmen.

At the meeting, Sullivan asked the call firefighters if they would be willing to continue for $15,000, half their FY 2000 pay. Only one of the members expressed concern about the reduction, which Sullivan said shows their selflessness in serving the people of Cohasset.

"I thought they were magnificent," Sullivan said of the call firefighters.

Aide positions may get budget ax

Savings to be used for new teachers

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Adding two teachers at the Osgood School could spell the end to several paid activity aide positions in the elementary schools.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said last week that keeping the student-teacher ratio as low as possible is a priority.

The school committee approved a $9.24 million budget last Thursday that is virtually level-funded with the exception of contractual salary increases.

Faced with the possibility of an estimated $40 million debt exclusion vote in the spring to pay for upgrades and additions to the Deer Hill and middle-high schools, the school committee wants to avoid the need for a Prop. 2-1/2 override this year to pay for the operating budget.

Therefore, the school committee has to find the money within its proposed budget for the teaching positions. Board members also want to add a kindergarten bus run in the afternoon, so youngsters don't have to spend an hour on the bus to get home.

There is about $41,000 in "wiggle room" in the budget Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the school committee to stick with. To come up with the most of the additional money needed — the school committee suggested Osgood and Deer Hill eliminate activity aide positions for a total of about $25,000. The school committee will also take $10,000 from the lunch program budget, which is no longer running at a deficit. The cost of two teaching positions is estimated at $76,000 and the additional bus run is another $6,000.

Ofsthun won't seek reelection

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

"We've accomplished a lot and we have a lot more to do, but my family and career have taken a back seat and I need to put them back on the high priority list."

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun

For the second year in a row, there will be two open school committee seats up for grabs at the annual town election.

School committee member Kathy Ofsthun, who at three years has the most tenure on the committee, said she will not run for reelection.

"I've decided not to re-run for the school committee," Ofsthun told her fellow committee members at its meeting last Thursday. "It's been a great experience and I've loved working with every one of you. We've accomplished a lot and we have a lot more to do, but my family and career have taken a back seat and I need to put them back on the high priority list."

Ofsthun went on to say it was "critical" that whoever fills her seat support the school technology plan and the Deer Hill/ middle high school renovation project.

School committee member Stephanie Noble was saddened after hearing Ofsthun wouldn't seek reelection.

"Kathy has been an inspiration to me," she said. "Although I understand her decision well, I am sorry she is leaving."

Fellow school committee incumbent Betsy Connolly has also announced she will not run for reelection at the April 8 town election.

Both Connolly and Noble ran unopposed last year when elected to the school committee. Connolly ran for a one-year term, which became available when former committee member Joe McElroy resigned the last year of his three-year term.

Noble took the place of former chairman Rick Shea, who did not seek reelection last year.

As of Wednesday afternoon, no candidate had pulled papers for either of the two open school committee seats.

A race is brewing for the one open seat on the Board of Selectmen. Both planning board member Robert Sturdy and former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins have declared their candidacies for the seat being vacated by two-time selectman Diane Sullivan.

Other candidates to declare their intentions to run for office in April include water commissioner John McNabb, sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil, and library trustees Agnes McCann, Carol Riley, and Patience Towle.

The following positions are available at the April 8 Town Election: Selectmen (one) for a three-year term, School Committee (two) for a three-year term, Assessors (one) for a three-year term, Board of Health (one) for a three-year term, Cohasset Housing Authority (one) for a five-year term, Planning Board (one) for a five-year term, Recreation Commission (one) for a five-year term, Sewer Commission (one) for a three-year term, and Water Commission (one) for a three-year term.

The last day to obtain nomination papers from the Town Clerk's office is Thursday, Feb. 17. Nomination papers must be returned to the Town Clerk by Tuesday, Feb. 22.

Correction is noted

Last week's story about the Chamber of Commerce's revitalization program for the village and harbor contained an error.

The article should have stated that the Chamber is in the process of putting together a program to raise $200,000 for the improvements. The article incorrectly stated that the Chamber already had $200,000 for the program.

The Mariner regrets the error.

Hagerty plans ok'ed

Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti announced Wednesday that plans for a proposed park and dock on the Hagerty property have been approved by the Army Corps of Engineers and the state Division of Waterways.

Bonetti said the project is estimated to cost $200,000. The committee already has $50,000, leaving $150,000 needed to complete the proposed Hagerty park.

Bonetti will come before selectmen next Tuesday night to discuss the possibility of seeking the $150,000 at the Mar. 25 annual town meeting.

"We're thinking about trying for the whole thing at town meeting, including the dock," Bonetti said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it is up to selectmen whether the town seeks the money in March or waits until the fall.

Haddad said the $150,000 would have to be borrowed or be funded through a capital exclusion if it was approved in March.

"We've got a school deficit, police overtime problem, and legal bills to take care of," he said. "There's no way we could fund it through free cash at the spring town meeting."

Mitigation board needs members

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Selectman Diane Sullivan said the Greenbush mitigation committee desperately needs new members to help chairman Tom Gruber in the committee's dealings with the MBTA.

"I'm making a plea for people to join the mitigation committee," Sullivan said. "We'd like to have people who are not biased toward the train either way. I'm embarrassed to say Tom Gruber is carrying an enormous load. There's a huge amount of paperwork and he needs some help."

Sullivan said the committee, on which she belongs, currently has around six members. She said the committee needs more help, however.

Department head salary hikes

Selectmen reconsidered last week's vote to cap department head salary increases at five percent, agreeing instead to Town Manager Mark Haddad's proposed increases for three department heads of over five percent.

The salary increases affected Council of Elder Affairs chairman Kathy Bryanton, treasurer/collector Joseph DiVito, and Haddad.

Selectman Tom Callahan, who voted along with Diane Sullivan and Merle Brown to cap department head increases at five percent last week, agreed to reconsider the vote, opening the matter up for debate.

Callahan suggested a motion which would cap the pool of department head salary increases at five percent, but would allow Haddad the latitude to increase some salaries over five percent, as long as the total increases fell within the five percent total.

The motion failed, however, and selectmen voted ultimately to agree to Haddad's proposed increases, which totaled a 5.17 percent total increase in the salaries of department heads.

Brown changed his vote, saying he didn't want to stick to a five percent limit which only affected three employees.

Brown voted along with fellow selectmen Ronnie McMorris and Fred Koed to support Haddad's proposed increased, much to the chagrin of Callahan.

"This year, the situation isn't critical because we don't have an override," he said. "But the town has given a clear indication that they want the budget kept under control. What's the problem with putting a cap on the increases? We're not private industry, with an endless supply of profits."

The difference between Haddad's proposed increases and a five-percent limit amounted to $3,099. McMorris said Haddad's opinion on salary increases should be respected.

"Where did Mark get these numbers?" she asked. "Based on his position as Town Manager, he makes evaluations and salary recommendations for these department heads. We should reward people for doing a good job."

Town census for 2000

The Town Census for 2000 has been mailed to each household. The local census is primarily used to maintain voting and jury lists, but it also aids in school enrollment projections, public safety and senior citizens' needs. The local census also establishes proof of residency, which is often needed for certain privileges, such as transfer station stickers and cemetery rights, certain veterans' benefits and reduced tuition rates at state colleges and universities.

Dog forms were enclosed. The licenses are valid through Dec. 31. Forms need to be returned as soon as possible. If you did not receive one, call the Town Clerk's office.

I was at a party feeling very shy because there were a lot of celebrities around and I was sitting in a corner alone and a very beautiful young man came up to me and offered me some salted peanuts and he said, "I wish they were emeralds," as he handed me the peanuts and that was the end of my heart, I never got it back."

Facilities group presses forward

Problems analyzed at Deer Hill and middle high school

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The school facilities committee may meet twice a week until the March 25 town meeting in an effort to get the best possible information to voters who will decide whether or not to support a project which may reach $41 million.

The committee has been busily working on plans for renovations to Deer Hill Elementary School and Cohasset Middle High School since voters appropriated $390,000 for construction drawings at the Dec. 6 special town meeting and subsequent override election.

Committee chairman Rob Spofford said the month of January has been spent on a detailed analysis of the problems in both school buildings.

"We've prioritized the issues in each school, with code and life safety issues being the most important," Spofford said. "We wanted to understand in real dollars and cents what the problems are."

The facilities committee and architects from Strekalovsky and Hoit, the Hingham firm contracted for the project, honed the cost of a renovation-only project from $28 million to $19. 3 million.

The $19.3 million figure includes modifications necessary to meet the standards of the Americans with Disabilities Act [ADA], including elevators, ramps, and handicapped-accessible bathrooms.

To reduce the cost of renovations by nearly $9 million, Spofford said the $19.3 million option doesn't ensure a 50-year useful life for the renovated buildings, and therefore would likely not be a candidate for state reimbursement.

"We cut back on things like plumbing, where we looked at leaving some parts of the system as they are instead of a complete rehaul," Spofford said. "Instead of a 50-year useful life, you might only be looking at five to seven years before the plumbing would need to be fixed again."

Spofford said the renovation-only option doesn't address the need for an addition at one or both schools to handle projected enrollment increases or take into account the school committee's recommendation of a grade 6-8 middle school.

"Those numbers don't do anything with respect to program and enrollment needs and it also doesn't address the issue of grades 6-8 being grouped together," he said.

"We've prioritized the issues in each school, with code and life safety issues being the most important. We wanted to understand in real dollars and cents what the problems are."
School facilities chairman Rob Spofford

School superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey has received notification that the school committee's chosen renovation/addition option, estimated at $41 million, will be 60 percent reimbursable by the state, which would leave the town a cost of approximately $16.5 million.

While Cohasset has a spot reserved on the 2000 state list for school project funding, Spofford said the town could pull itself off the list if the town decided to go with a renovation-only option.

The $41 million option includes additions at both Deer Hill and the middle high school to meet program and enrollment needs and also involves moving the sixth grade to the middle high school and the third grade to Deer Hill.

Under state reimbursement guidelines, all infrastructure at both schools would have to be sufficiently upgraded to ensure a 50-year useful life for the renovated buildings.

When determining which projects receive state funding in the past, state Department of Education officials have preferred the construction of new schools or projects containing additions to those which are solely renovations of existing buildings.

Department of Education chairman David Driscoll has said recently the state might be willing to reimburse renovation projects as well.

Spofford said the facilities committee is unsure whether the state will reimburse renovation projects which do not meet program or enrollment needs.

"In the last 10 years, there's been a bias toward new construction," Spofford said. "My understanding is Driscoll wants to take projects like ours. I don't think he's talking about 60 percent reimbursement for projects which don't address program or enrollment needs.

Over the next two weeks, Spofford said the committee will be seeking clarification on the issue.

"If the state said they'd give us 60 cents on the dollar strictly for renovations, we'd have to take a good, hard look at it," he said.

Having spent the past month honing the cost of the renovation-only project, Spofford said the committee will now switch its focus to fine-tuning the reimbursable project in time for the Mar. 25 annual town meeting.

The committee will continue to meet at 7:00 on Wednesday evenings but may meet an additional time each week to get ready for town meeting, according to Spofford.

At its Wednesday night's meeting, held after the Mariner went to press, the facilities committee was expected to sign a contract with an architect for the design and construction phase of the school renovation project.

Strekalovsky and Hoit have been the contracted architects for the first two phases of the project, which consisted of an existing conditions report and making a recommendation on a renovation plan to voters at the Dec. Special town meeting.

"Whichever architect is chosen, we will be working in earnest with that architect in February to understand the reimbursable project," Spofford said.

Middle school sports could be saved

Program among possible cuts in school budget

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With a school budget which has been stripped to its bare bones by cuts in the last two years, middle high school principal Curtis Collins' request for a new science teacher means other items in the school department budget may have to be cut to pay for the new teacher.

But it doesn't appear the middle school sports program will get the ax this year. Collins mentioned middle school sports could possibly be eliminated to help pay for the new teacher, but said he thinks he has found a way to keep the program for the 2000-2001 school year.

At last Thursday's school committee meeting, Collins said the new teacher is needed to add biology sections and to keep from increasing class sizes.

"We're transitioning to a new science program next year, and we need those biology classes, primarily in the 10th grade," he said.

Collins said he realized the hiring of a new science teacher position would bring about reductions elsewhere in the school budget.

"I know there's no painless situation here," he said.

Following Collins' request for the new teaching position, school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo asked Collins to "throw the door open" and suggest possible programs which could be reduced or eliminated to pay for the new teacher.

Collins responded to DeGiacomo at Thursday's meeting by saying the middle school sports program could possibly be a candidate for elimination. By Monday, however, Collins said he hoped he had found a way to save the program.

"I'm looking to cut equipment in the budget to pay for the new teacher," he said. "Cutting middle school sports is something we've looked into, but I don't think we're going to go that route."

130 of the 180 students in grades 7 and 8 at Cohasset Middle School participate in the $48,650 interscholastic sports program.

Collins said the high level of participation mandates doing everything possible to save the program.

"The middle school sports program is a marvelous activity," Collins said. "I'm reluctant to cut it. To lose a program which allows 130 youngsters at the middle school level to engage in good, healthy, wholesome activities after school would be a huge loss."

"To lose a program which allows 130 youngsters at the middle school level to engage in good, healthy, wholesome activities after school would be a huge loss."
Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins

Many surrounding school districts no longer have middle school sports programs. In fact, instead of playing public schools from Hingham, Scituate, or Hull, Cohasset plays against public schools in Avon, Abington, and Carver or against private schools such as Sacred Heart (Kingston), Thayer Academy (Braintree), and Derby Academy (Hingham).

"We book the same teams every year," said middle-high school athletic director Clark Chatterton. "Not too many of the nearby towns have middle school sports anymore."

One of the unique aspects of the middle school athletic program is its connection with some teams in Cohasset High School. In sports such as gymnastics, skiing, golf, and swimming, which don't have middle school teams, students in grades 7 and 8 are allowed to participate on the high school team as an "activity."

"The middle school students can participate on the high school teams, but their scores don't count as part of the competitions," Chatterton said.

Middle school students have many of their own teams as well. In the fall, the middle school offers boys and girls soccer, field hockey, and football. During the winter, students can play boys basketball, girls basketball, or take part on the wrestling team. The spring season finds students playing baseball, boys and girls lacrosse, and boys and girls tennis.

While the $48,650 cost of the program would likely cover the cost of new science teacher, Collins feels the money is well spent on middle school sports.

"I think you get a lot of bang for your buck," he said. "It compares very favorably to the money spent on high school athletics."

Chatterton said the no-cut policy which had been a staple of the middle school sports program was eliminated this year due to budget constraints.

Many of the students who would have played on middle school teams in sports such as soccer and basketball now take part in programs of the town's recreation department instead.

Chatterton said town youth sports programs can be just as successful as interscholastic programs in helping young athletes hone their skills for high school.

"Norwell and Hanover are two of the high school sports powers in eastern Massachusetts, and they don't have middle school sports," he said. "Marshfield has a tremendous high school program as well. Those towns have tremendous youth sports organizations."

How has Cohasset been able to maintain its middle school sports program when so many other towns have eliminated it? Chatterton said parental involvement and support has been paramount toward keeping the program going.

"We're fortunate with our boosters, who are tremendous," he said.

If budgetary constraints remain what they've been over the last couple of years, Collins said he may have to consider cutting the program in the future.

"This is the third year in a row we're looking to cut things," he said. "We're getting to the core of our budget."

AROUND TOWN

FRIENDLY GREETINGS

Ilene and Bill Colwill, formerly at Hull Street, want to send greetings to their friends in Cohasset via the Mariner. Last summer they moved to Pottsboro, Texas, where Bill is a vice president with South Style Nuts. Ilene was Osgood School's secretary for 15 years and is now working at the middle school in Sherman, Texas.

It's been quite a transition from New England in many ways, but they are adjusting well, learning to love their new home in the very pretty lake region of northern Texas and enjoying the warmer climate especially now as they hear reports of our frigid temperatures!

Everyone misses you two, Ilene and Bill, and hope that you can get here for a visit real soon!

MARATHON RUNNER

Hats off to Ben Chittick, and we will tell you why! On Monday, April 17, he is going to be running in the Boston Marathon — he is training hard for the race that is famous for being one of America's premier marathons and therefore more difficult than most — so Ben knows that his efforts will ultimately help a worthwhile cause. Ben is participating in a program called "Marathon Strides Against MS," which is designed to raise money and awareness for the fight against multiple sclerosis.

Ben is trying to raise more than $2,000 for the National MS Society — the Central New England Chapter — all proceeds he receives will go toward research and a variety of programs to help more than 10,000 people in Massachusetts and New Hampshire dealing with MS. He is really hoping that you will be able to help him in this effort — he received donations ranging from $15-$250 when he ran his first marathon this past November! So, anything in that range would be wonderful (Ben himself will be donating $75 as well as running — what kind of a super guy is that?!)

Get in touch with Ben and be sure that you give a pledge so that we will all be showing our support — he has pledge forms and his address is 99 Prince St., #4 Boston, MA 02113.

Then, we can all watch Ben either in person or on television, as he runs!

ARTS FESTIVAL

Dianne Kennedy called this week with a message for all — the Arts Festival is going to be held June 15 to 18, and they are looking for volunteers — there will be a party Feb. 3 at 7:30 p.m. and they want you!!

Call Diane for more information at 383-1304.

DEAN'S LIST

Bryant College sends us news about their fall semester dean's list! Christopher G. Eskin, a junior finance major of Marshfield, and Elizabeth A. Mahoney, a junior marketing major, made the grade and we are ever-so-proud of them! Keep up your good work!

SENIOR CENTER

The Cohasset Senior Center has some super plans for the year 2000! If you would like to enjoy a little chamber music, there are four Boston Symphony Orchestra's Chamber Music Teas scheduled for Non-Symphony Friday afternoons at the Cabot-Cahners Room of the BSO. The Music Teas offer coffee, tea, baked refreshments and an hour-long chamber music performance by members of the orchestra. Doors open at 1:30 p.m. for the 2:30 p.m. concerts. Tickets and round trip to Boston are $18 and the remaining dates are Friday, Feb. 4, and Friday, March 31. Call the Cohasset Elder Affairs at 383-9112 for reservations for any or all of the teas.

Also, don't forget the annual Valentine Tea Party to be held at the Second Congregational Church Friday, Feb. 11, at 1 p.m. Please RSVP to CEA at 383-9112.

Lisa Logan found a welcome sign when she returned home with her new baby, Halle Jo-Ann, at the Second Congregational Church where she is choir member.

FIELD TRIP

Christopher J. Carr of Cohasset, a sophomore at Boston College High School, recently visited the New Bedford Whaling Museum as part of a research project for students in an American Literature honors class, who have read "Moby Dick." Chris was one of the 74 honor students who were required to do a research project on some aspect of the text — he got an extensive tour there, then went on to visit the historic Bethel which is across the street from the museum. The small chapel was frequented by Melville and other sailors during his New Bedford days and also figures prominently in "Moby Dick."

ON THE MEND

We all hope that Jeanne McAuliffe is feeling better as she reads this — and that she is home and resting comfortably! What a wonderful gal!

MORE BC HIGH NEWS

Sorry, I gave Chris Carr a plug for being such a great student, then I received two more press releases from Boston College High School telling me that Sean C. Chase and Paul Trendowicz also made the trip to the museum and chapel.

THE BEST!

Kelsey Henderson, a junior, and daughter of Warner and Barbara Henderson, performed in the Cambridge School of Weston's annual Winter Solstice Concert Sunday, Dec. 12. The reviews are all in and we hear that she and her group were undoubtedly the best!

There you go — this week's news — where is your special event? Let me know! Just give me a call or drop me a note (at 9 Red Gate Lane if there is a deadline on an event).

Police dispatcher had slamming former job

Wrestled in WWF before coming to Cohasset

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A note of advice for anyone who goes to the Cohasset Police Department: Don't mess with dispatcher Dana Magazu. You might get body-slammed.

Magazu was a professional wrestler for 15 years, spending a few of those years in the wildly successful World Wrestling Federation. His friendly nature, however, ensures those coming to the police station will be spared the array of bone-crushing maneuvers he used during his days as a wrestler.

"He's quite a character," police chief Brian Noonan said of Magazu, who was hired last June. "His wrestling past didn't come up until after he was hired. It makes for great conversation, though."

Standing five feet tall with short-cropped blond hair and a ready smile, Magazu still possesses a weightlifter's physique after his retirement from pro wrestling.

He was known by the monikers Butch Cassidy, Dana Carpenter, and Sonny Boy Blue in his days wrestling in the division known as "midget wrestlers". At five feet tall, he was much taller than many of the other midget wrestlers.

"Some of them were only up to here on me," Magazu said, motioning with his hand below his chin. "Some of the bigger guys called me 'Andre the Midget' because I was the tallest out of all the midget wrestlers."

Magazu, 34, grew up in Holbrook, where he still resides. Like today's youngsters, he loved watching professional wrestling as a kid.

"I remember watching Bruno Sammartino on television," Magazu said of his childhood hero. "I knew wrestling was what I wanted to do."

Magazu wrestled and was a member of the ice hockey team at Xaverian Brothers High School in Westwood, which he graduated from in 1982.

Soon after graduation, he had a conversation with a friend which would change the course of his future.

"I was training at the gym and talking to a friend who was a bodybuilder," Magazu said. "He said he was in school, and I thought he was going to Northeastern or something. I asked him where he went to school and he said he was in Killer Kowalski's Wrestling School. He told me about it and I signed up."

Kowalski's wrestling school is now located in Malden, but was on Boylston Street in Boston when Magazu attended it from Sept. 1982 to March 1983. Magazu said the school taught him the basics he needed to know to have a pro wrestling career.

"They taught us how to land, how to do punches and kicks, and how to use the ropes," he said of the physical tools needed to succeed in the business. "We also learned how to do interviews, how to make faces, and were taught the business-type aspects necessary to build a career."

Magazu's first match was with a small federation called International Championship Wrestling in Parsippany, New Jersey, in April 1983. He worked in shows with independent federations in New Jersey and Pennsylvania for a few months until opportunity came knocking late that year.

Magazu's opportunity was a match with the Haiti Kid, who wrestled in the WWF from time to time. The Haiti Kid liked what he saw from Magazu and his business connections enabled Magazu to have a tryout for the WWF. His tryout was successful, and he began wrestling in the WWF in Jan. 1984.

While he was excited about his new career, his mother was less than thrilled about her son's occupation.

"My mother hated it," Magazu said. "My father kind of liked it, though. They came to my first match around here, which was at an armory in Melrose. My mom said I did a lot better than she thought I'd do."

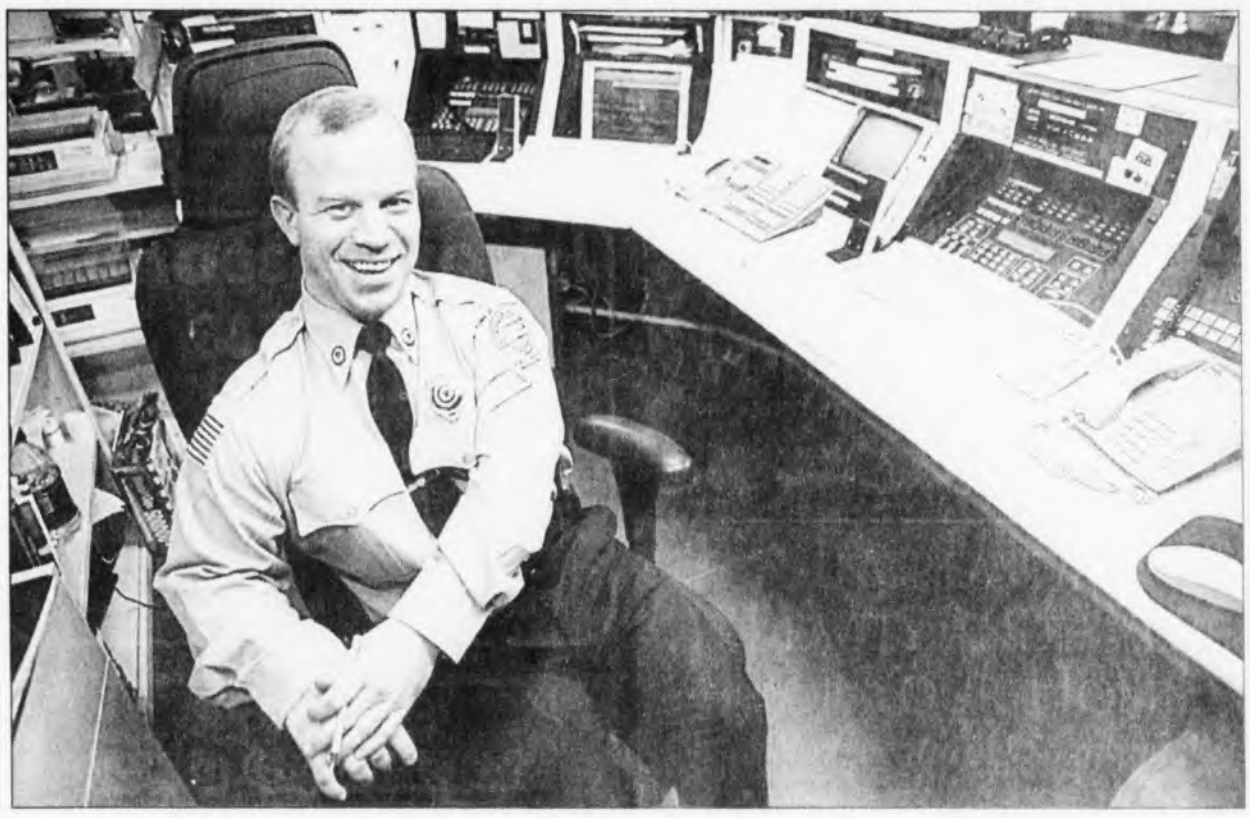
WWF president Vince McMahon felt likewise, and Magazu's big-time wrestling career was about to begin. During his time in the WWF, Magazu, as Butch Cassidy, wrestled with some of pro wrestling's biggest stars, including the world-famous Hulk Hogan and the late Andre the Giant.

"I wrestled the match before Hulk Hogan did the night he first won the WWF title," Magazu said. "He was a great guy, always nice to the kids. Andre the Giant was a wonderful guy too. People liked to be around him because he was so nice. It was fun to meet those guys."

Magazu is even mentioned in a best-selling book about pro wrestling penned by Mick Foley, better known to wrestling fans as "Mankind," one of the most today's most popular WWF wrestlers.

When he saw himself mentioned in the book, "Have a Nice Day: A Tale of Blood and Sweatsocks," Magazu was shocked.

"He mentioned my name as Butch Cassidy and talked about a wrestling promoter we both used to work for in New York," Magazu said. "I said 'Oh, my God,' when I saw my name. I knew him way back when. He's one hell of a guy, a little crazy though. He was determined to make it in the business, and now he's famous."



Dana Magazu, a civilian dispatcher for the police/fire departments, was a professional wrestler for 15 years.

While wrestling in the WWF, Magazu said the constant hard landings and frenetic schedule associated with the sport took a toll on the bodies of all the wrestlers. While the outcomes are predetermined and the moves choreographed, he said injuries are still a part of the business.

"There's a chiropractor in the dressing room at all times," Magazu said. "The falls can really mess up your back. Also, unlike other sports, there's no off-season. At times, I only had two or three days off a month. Your body takes a constant pounding."

Magazu said one of the more exciting parts of wrestling was the opportunity to see the world.

"I went to London, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the Philippines, Australia, the Bahamas, and all over the United States for free," he said. "I wrestled in Madison Square Garden, the Boston Garden, some of the most famous arenas in the world."

For someone who had only graduated from high school a few years earlier, Magazu said the experience could be overwhelming at times.

"Sometimes, it was hard," he said. "I was this young, naive kid from a small town, and I had to rent cabs, and find my way around these big cities. It was definitely a big learning experience."

Magazu stayed with the WWF for about five years and wrestled in smaller federations until 1998. He said he was having a more difficult time finding work as federations stopped using midget wrestlers as much as they had during the 1980s.

"I wasn't getting enough work," he said about deciding to hang up his wrestling boots. "It was slowing down for everybody. Also, after constantly travelling for so many years, I wanted to settle down. It got too hard to keep missing holidays and family events."

Now, Magazu lives closer to his family and gets to be a part of the family birthdays and get-togethers he missed during his years on the road.

He is single, and said he still manages to watch wrestling on those occasions when he's not working at the Cohasset police station.

"It's way different than when I wrestled," he said of today's wrestling shows, which depict images of beer-guzzling heroes and scantily-clad women. "I think it's gotten a little out of hand. You see Stone Cold [Steve Austin] drinking beers in the ring and there's little kids watching. I don't know if they need to see that."

While he may disagree with some of the choreography that is on in today's WWF, he said he doesn't have any regrets about his years in pro wrestling.

"If I could turn the clock back, I'd do it all again," he said. "The free travel and the friends I made were all worth it. I had a great time."

Citizen of the Year

As editor of the Cohasset Mariner, it is my pleasure to announce that Clark Chatterton has been named Citizen of the Year.

A fixture at Cohasset High for 32 years, Mr. Chatterton is loved by so many for his generosity of spirit as evidenced by his caring work behind the scenes. Whether it's as simple as offering a student a ride or as involved as the Relay for Life to benefit cancer research, Mr. Chatterton is always ready and willing to help.

While nominations were open, a total of 27 different individuals and families took the time to nominate a citizen detailing his or her contributions to help make this town one we all love.

Our thanks go to Marion Douglas of 404 Beechwood St., Glenn Pratt of 482 King St. and Robert M. Davenport of 17 Black Horse Lane for joining me here at the Cohasset Mariner office in Hingham Square for the challenging and pleasurable task of poring over the nominations.

Regrettably, we cannot recognize each of the 15 nominees with the Citizen of the Year Award. And we send our heartfelt thanks to all those who wrote such thoughtful letters and notes nominating their fellow citizens.

The selection committee narrowed the field down to 10, then seven, four and finally one. The final decision — although not reached without considerable discussion — was unanimous.

So we extend our congratulations to Mr. Chatterton — a devoted son, husband, father and grandfather — who always seems to find the time to help his fellow man whether it be through is work as athletic director, at the concession at the Music Circus or as a friend or acquaintance.

Mr. Chatterton respects integrity and character in others while he exudes those qualities everyday.

"You won't find it in his job description – all the things he does – but you can feel it in the stories his students, athletes, fellow teachers, friends and family related with warmth and respect and lots of good humor," wrote Dr. Roger A. Pompeo in his nomination.

With this award, the Cohasset Mariner offers recognition for making a difference. In our society too many role models go unrecognized. Too often people today look to the sports, rock or movie star with envy, when the real hero is the local police officer, firefighter, parent, teacher, church leader or government official.

The annual Citizen of the Year Award is our way of taking our hats off to those among us who go that extra mile without asking for anything in return but the intrinsic reward of helping to make Cohasset a better place.

As Marcia S. Coe of Pond Street wrote in her nomination:

"He has always made the youth of Cohasset his Number One priority, even contributing from his own personal funds. He has been tireless in his efforts for the Cohasset Relay for Life and in the past he has organized testimonials for retiring citizens. We have known him for 30 years and have always been pleased with his efforts in the school system and as an all-around citizen."

Station thoughts

DEAR MERLE:

I write to you in regard to the train situation as it affects Cohasset.

I am opposed to the train and feel that it is much more about the big, political machine and federal money than it is about Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate needing a train.

It does appear, however, that the train is coming, so the question arises as to where to put the station? It certainly appears to me that if we are going to have the train shoved down our throats and have it run through the center of town, we should at least have it stop! The arguments for this are many and seem obvious.

My first concern is for the people who live near the tracks and the effect the train will have on them. It seems that regardless of where the train station will be, the train is going to affect them. I feel that the previous vote at Town Meeting was clearly a "No" vote on the train itself, not on the placement of the station. My sister is having a sewage treatment plant built in her backyard, and she had to give the town an easement to the land to build it on; so I sort of know through her how they feel. If I were a James Lane abutter, or a resident of one of those homes under the underpass at Hingham rotary, I would be quite familiar with the phone number at the MBTA.

Any town that has a railroad corridor that runs through it puts the station downtown where feasible. Having the train stop in the downtown area will address safety concerns because the train will have to stop. Hundreds of people, including our elderly, will be able to access the train on foot if they so choose.

A downtown station will also address the nagging problem of town parking. With the resurgence of Community Center activities, which are great, and the opening of the new Red Lion Inn, an MBTA-upgraded, 350-car parking lot would certainly be a plus.

All the station on 3A will ever be is a "Park 'n Ride" lot that mirrors the proposed "Park 'n Ride" lot which is roughly one mile down the road at the site of Hingham Lumber. This seems redundant to me.

The Planning Board voted unanimously for an in-town station, for what I see are obvious reasons. May I suggest to you as a Board, to put this question on the ballot at the upcoming Town Election and let the citizens vote formally on this important issue?

It would be a shame if for the next 100 years people wonder as the train buzzes through the center of town, why we didn't have the foresight to place the station where it would best serve our townspeople?

Let me close by saying that the time and effort given by the Board of Selectmen serving the residents of this town is much appreciated

Jim Watson

Editor's note: Jim Watson provided the Mariner with a copy of his letter. Merle Brown is chairman of the board of selectmen.

Planners back Village station

TO: THE BOARD OF SELECTMEN

It appears likely that the state's plan to build the Greenbush Commuter Rail Line will come to fruition. The Planning Board, by unanimous vote, supports the downtown location for the Cohasset station. In time past, the selectmen supported a downtown station and then subsequently changed their support to the 3A station. The MBTA has indicated that it is willing to put the station where the selectmen vote to have it.

Since that last selectmen's vote, an extensive revitalization plan for the village/harbor area has been drawn up which deserves and has broad support from the citizens of the town and the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce. In the opinion of the Planning Board, the downtown station and attendant parking are vital to the revitalization of the village and the funding of the program.

The Planning Board therefore requests a joint meeting with the Board of Selectmen and the Chamber of Commerce so that the proponents of the downtown revitalization and downtown station may fully present their case and answer any questions the selectmen may have. If there are any thoughtful proponents for a 3A station, they should be invited to make a presentation as well. The only issue for this meeting is: If the Greenbush Line is built, what station location will best serve the present and future interests of the town?

Planning Board Chairman, Alfred S. Moore Jr.

Village station opposed

TO THE PLANNING BOARD:

Let me see if I understand this. After the town meeting in October of 1996, where the voters of Cohasset voted against having the train station located in the village, the board of selectmen voted that if the train came the station should be on route 3A. The selectmen and voters were aware that the planning board wanted the station in the village. That should have been the end of it.

What is the purpose of bringing this issue up again? The townspeople have spoken. They don't want the station located in the village area. Your statements that there will be no traffic impact is inaccurate at best. Imagine 300 cars arriving in the village area between 6 and 8 a.m. and departing between 5 and 7 p.m. There are three streets entering and leaving that area, Pleasant Street, Depot Court and Ripley Road. As for people walking to the station, the only people that will walk are those who are within walking distance. As the majority of the people will be arriving by car, and then leaving at the end of the day, how will that help the local downtown businesses? There will be no special design for the station. Visit any T station, and that is what will be built regardless of whether it is on Route 3A or the village.

How many more times will the planning board bring this issue up? The town listened to you before and voted the idea down. With all the other issues on your agenda, this should be dropped. What part of "no" don't you understand?"

Buried power lines

TO THE EDITOR:

We read with a certain degree of incredulity the story in the Mariner of Jan. 27 in which it was reported that the Chamber of Commerce wants to place an article before town meeting which will have the effect of assessing $5.5 million on our utility bills so that the chamber can realize its goal of placing the power lines in the village and harbor areas underground.

According to Mr. Rizzo of the chamber, this is how it will work: Every Cohasset resident who has electric and telephone service (which is to say, all of us) will be assessed a 2-percent surcharge on our electric and phone bills to pay for the cost of placing the power lines in the village area underground. According to Mr. Rizzo, this initial 2-percent increase would pay for about half of the $5.5 million cost of the entire job; he also indicated that the chamber might go back to town meeting at a later date for another 2-percent surcharge to pay for the rest of the job. (We should point out that Mark Haddad, our town manager, thought that there can be one, and only one, 2-percent assessment.) Thus, for someone with a $100 monthly electric bill and a $100 monthly phone bill (both of ours are higher than that), the monthly assessment would be 2 percent of $200 — $4 — or about $50 annually, with the potential, if Mr. Rizzo is correct, for doubling that amount to a $100 annual surcharge within another year or two — for a period of 20 years!

Speaking for ourselves, we would agree that it would be a nice thing to place these unsightly lines underground. We applaud the efforts of Mr. Roy and Mr. Ordelheide for showing faith in our town by investing heavily in it, and to the extent that we think that removing these power lines will help the businesses in town — and by extension (at least indirectly) all of us who also own property in the town — we even would be willing to pay a few bucks to help defray the cost of this endeavor. (We presently are paying for one of the street lights

Inspired by third-graders at Osgood

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I think it was mostly getting the pictures back of Maureen Alcott's third graders at Osgood. Finally we had some printable photos to show for all the great work these people have been doing — at least I hope readers will be able to see the joy that is going on in that classroom, the joy of accomplishment, the joy of helping, the joy of leadership, the joy of learning some positive things about the world.

The Osgood School success story shows that one person can make a fantastic difference. The inspired Maureen Alcott inspired her students, and now most of Osgood is recycling, but it took research, discussion, reading, writing, posters and other art work like the neat totem pole made of recyclables down at Mrs. Ogden's art room, and spreading the word, as well as homemade recycling boxes throughout the school.

Then again reading the full-page-plus spread in The Boston Globe about McDonald's environmental turnaround, how economic leaders can make such a huge ecological difference as well as profits, was very encouraging.

And then there was Chet Raymo's Globe column on crows yesterday. I can always count on him to be positive, even about dark matters.

Even the article by the medical student about his first experience dissecting a cadaver — wow — how he went from squeamish fear to reverencing the sublimity of the human body and the altruistic thoughts of the donor — what a turnaround in him — and in me.

And then there's the social action group I've recently joined that will be a challenge. I think of the old saying, if you need picking up, help someone. It works.

I had every intention of continuing my PAYT [Pay-As-You-Throw]/buck-a-bag series ...but then perhaps I am. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman of the Cohasset Recycling Committee.

LIBRARY CORNER

Tax forms

Standard and federal tax forms are now available in the Reference Room at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. They have not yet received the book of "reproducible forms" which offers access to the more specialized forms and schedules, but they should be available soon. If you need tax forms, come into the library and pick them up in the Reference Room.

Try 'Electric Library'

The library's web site (www.cohasset library.org) offers home access to a number of useful databases. From your home computer, you can access these web reference sources — all you have to do is enter your Cohasset Library barcode number.

One of the liveliest of these web sites is the "Electric Library," an online research service specially designed for students, though it is informative and fun for anyone. There are three basic steps to this search process: 1) Ask a question — literally — type in your question. 2) Next, you Explore the results list, which shows details for each "hit" — how long an article is, what reading grade etc. 3) Finally, the Discover section displays the full text of a document, picture, map, etc.

Home access to this database is funded by the Southeastern Mass. Regional Library System to which Cohasset belongs. They hope that you will try the "Electric Library" soon and let them know via e-mail what you think of it.

Lost and found

Suzanne Terry, children's librarian at Paul Pratt Memorial Library, reminds all parents of children who visit the library to also visit the "ever growing" lost and found in the Children's Room. There is a great assortment of winter clothing and other objects that are not claimed. We hope that parents in the community will recognize their children's lost clothing and pick them up at their earliest convenience.

HEALTH NOTES

Environmentally sound landscaping and health

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On Tuesday, Jan. 25, the Community Garden Club of Cohasset heard two speakers talk about Environmentally Sound Landscaping (ESL). This is the latest buzzword for an activity that may have far-reaching effects on our environment and our public health for the long term. George Zoto of the executive office of Environmental Affairs, and Mike Walsh, a lawn care consultant, talked about the effect that proper lawn care would have on water supplies in eastern Massachusetts. Beautiful weather, far into the winter has created extremely reduced water supplies in the state's acquifers and in many ponds, rivers and streams. These reduced supplies will cause severe water shortages in many towns in Massachusetts. Although Cohasset has plenty of water, its quality is threatened by pollution from pesticides and nutrients from excessive use of fertilizers. The problem of overuse of pesticides and fertilizers has become so severe that the state has embarked on a program designed to make the public aware of the danger and has begun preparing a series of guidelines designed to reduce fertilizers and pesticides and control excessive water use. As more becomes known about these programs, we will keep you informed.

Folic acid use recommended for women of childbearing age

Folic acid is a B-vitamin, which helps prevent neural tube defects in infants. At the present time the Institute of Medicine recommends that all women of childbearing potential consume 400 micrograms of folic acid daily, either through eating fortified food containing folic acid and/or a supplement in addition to food foliate from a varied diet.

Folic acid is not just for pregnant women. Rather, it plays an important role in preconceptual health; therefore, women of childbearing potential should consume an intake of 400 micrograms per day throughout the childbearing years. On a national scale, about 50 percent of all pregnancies are unintended, making the consumption of folic acid during the entire childbearing years a necessity.

Revised recommendation for the use of meningococcal vaccine in college students

In October the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices (ACIP) modified its recommendation for use of meningococcal vaccine for college students. ACIP now recommends that the vaccine be made available for freshman students. Data from recent studies indicates that freshman students living in a dormitory may be at a moderately higher risk for invasive meningococcal illness. Other undergraduate students may also choose to be vaccinated.

The Massachusetts Department of Public Health (MDPH) encourages students and their parents to discuss meningococcal disease, the use of a vaccine and the specific circumstances of the student with their health care provider to determine if vaccination is appropriate for that student. While the vaccine is not now recommended for everyone, the vaccine may be appropriate for some students depending on their living conditions and behavioral risks. The disease organism is spread by direct contact with oral or nasal secretions. Close contact such as in a dormitory and student risk behaviors such as alcohol consumption, smoking or sharing food may cause some students to be at a greater risk.

Parents and students should be aware that the vaccine protects only about 90 percent of those who receive it and does not protect against serogroup B which causes about one third of the cases nationally. However, in Massachusetts only 10 percent of cases in 1998 were caused by that serogroup. The vaccine is not currently provided by the MDPH for school-based pre-exposure vaccination programs. which was turned off by the town.)

But the problem we have with the proposal is this:

The chamber wants to take $5.5 million out of our collective pockets when our town is being forced to nickel-and-dime everything it does because of a lack of revenue. At a time when the town is turning off street lights to save a few thousand dollars here, or eliminating the call firefighters to save a few thousand there, and is struggling to maintain police manning at a minimum level, can the chamber seriously be suggesting that it wants to tax our electric and telephone bills to the tune of $5.5 million to bury a few power lines?

To place this $5.5 million sum into perspective, consider that the new Osgood School cost Cohasset residents only $4 million after the 65-percent state reimbursement of the total $12 million cost.

And in terms of the renovation project for the Deer Hill School and Jr.-Sr. High School, $5.5 million is almost half of the entire cost of what that project will cost Cohasset residents. (If this project will cost $39 million and the state will reimburse us 65 percent, Cohasset residents will pay about $14 million).

The point is, there are a lot of other matters, with much higher priorities, for which Cohasset residents are being asked to dig into their pocketbooks these days. The $5.5 million cost for a purely aesthetic improvement for the direct benefit primarily of a handful of businesses rates way down on the list of priorities in our community by any objective standard.

We trust that many of our most vocal public officials and citizens, who were throwing conniptions last March with the proposal for the total of $50,000 in pay raises for our longest-serving teachers, will be appropriately apoplectic at the prospect of our pockets being raided to the tune of $5.5 million by the Chamber of Commerce. We are counting on them to rally their troops at town meeting to fight this article, because the irony is this: If town meeting appropriates so much as a nickel above the limits of Prop. 2-1/2 for the town budget, the town must call for an override referendum at which every taxpayer has an opportunity to vote.

But this article, if approved by town meeting, will not require an override. Thus, Cohasset residents can be assessed up to $5.5 million on their electric and phone bills by a mere handful of Chamber of Commerce supporters in the middle of the night when everyone else has left town meeting. We're sure that the self-appointed guardians of the public's purse will be equally vigilant about this matter.

Sarcasm aside however, the bottom line is that if our household is going to be taxed an additional $50-$100 per year to improve our town, we want to see that money go to something more significant — public safety and education, for example — than burying a few power lines. On the other hand, if the chamber is willing to work to get the really important matters in town straightened out first, we'll join with them in their effort to have the cost of their project passed onto every resident.

Playing football with Elian

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

For a while there last week I thought they were going to make Elian Gonzalez the new coach of the New England's football Patriots. I was wrong. He turned out to be the football itself.

They've offered the 6-year-old Cuban boy just about everything but the Pats' job to keep him from going back home where, they fear, Fidel Castro will throw him into a concentration camp on bread and water until he reaches puberty.

Never in my experience has any youngster been given more advice by more people who don't appear to know what they are talking about.

Elian, as you will recall, was found floating on a raft off the coast of Florida, the survivor of a shipwreck that claimed the life of his mother and her boy friend as they tried to flee the Castro dictatorship.

The trouble is no one knows exactly what his mother had in mind she climbed aboard the leaky craft for the 90-mile trip to Florida.

In spite of the fact that he had a father and a flock of close relatives behind in Havana, he was immediately claimed as a trophy by a cousin and a great uncle in Miami, a relationship that was strengthened by a visit to Disney World and a cornucopia of gifts.

"We're only trying to fulfill his mother's dying wish. She died trying to get him to freedom," they said as they filed suit in an American court to keep him.

The trouble is no one knows exactly what his mother had in mind when she climbed aboard the leaky craft for the 90-mile trip to Florida. Was it her idea? Was she blindly following her boyfriend? Was Elian told he would never see his father again?

The Immigration and Naturalization Service logically ruled that, in the absence of a mother, the kid should be returned to his father, who had remarried and had a pretty good job, as Cuban jobs go, at a tourist resort in his homeland. It wasn't luxury but it was a home.

That's where things started getting murky.

Up stepped Dan Burton, the "family values" senator from Indiana, to slap a subpoena on Elian demanding that the kid testify before Congress in March to keep him in the country long enough to get a bill through Congress conferring citizenship on him so he could stay out of his father's clutches.

So much for family values.

"I said, 'Would you like to go back to Cuba?' and he was very firm in saying 'No' and this without any coaching," said Burton after a 30-minute interview with the boy, who was just back from Disney World.

Meanwhile, Castro himself was busily organizing demonstrations for Elian's return and the boy's father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez, told interviewers that he had been offered $2 million, a house and a car if he would let his son stay in Miami and a church offered $4 million to Elian so he would be set for life in the States.

This is a 6-year-old boy, mind you.

"Why didn't Juan Miguel come to Miami himself to get his son," asked the skeptics. A good question. Was dad really interested in reclaiming his offspring? Wouldn't Castro refuse to let out of the prison island, fearing that he wouldn't come back?

Instead, the Cubans sent Elian's two grandmothers, who were allowed to meet their grandson in a neutral site (a nun's house) which was surrounded by police and INS agents and police boats patrolled a creek behind the house to keep some of the 200 news people and God knows who else.

"I saw him approach his grandmothers and had the opportunity to see his face and it was the face of fear," said one of his Miami cousins. "He doesn't want to go back."

"We told him we wanted to bring him back to Cuba and he nodded his head 'yes,'" said one of the grandmas.

Like any football game, you take your pick.

Appetizer party

MAY I PRESENT

SALLYANN CHATTERTON

It is so nasty out, everyone feels a little housebound, why not invite your friends to a little appetizer party! Just invite them to come early, stay late! If you have a nice soup or chowder and these two appetizers, I can guarantee that they (and you) will go home warm, content and very thrilled!

STUFFED POTATO SKINS

3 large potatoes
1 pound cooked bacon butter
chives
1 pound grated cheddar cheese oil
sour cream

Wash potatoes. Rub outside with oil and bake in either a 425 degree oven for 50 minutes or a microwave according to directions. Cool enough to handle. Cut each potato in half, lengthwise. Scoop out most of the meat, leaving enough so that the skin keeps its shape. Smooth butter over inside and outside of the skin and broil until each side is crisp. Crumble bacon and fill each skin with a layer of bacon topped with cheese. Put under broiler to melt cheese. Serve with sour cream and chives (skins can be filled with an assortment of fillings, whatever your choice or imagination).

Now, make your stuffed mushrooms (try using a package of frozen chopped spinach thawed with garlic and grated Parmesan cheese with a dash of nutmeg and a chopped onion as a stuffing).

There you go — everyone will be thrilled!

School user-fee policy has its first customer patients.

Last year's Relay for Life in Cohasset raised $77,000.

The policy gives the school committee discretion in using a sliding scale of one to 10 percent. The board had planned to charge the society 1 percent or $770 because it is a non-profit organization.

"I feel the event is so important to the town and community," Donze said in arguing for no fee. "It is made up of people who donate their time and services."

But as it turns out, the wording of the policy allows some flexibility. Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the school committee can decide to charge a flat fee or rental charge rather than a percentage and still "preserve the integrity of the policy."

Mary Shepherd of the South Shore Unit of the cancer society said that if the fees went to direct costs for custodians and rental of facilities rather can being based on a percentage of the proceeds — then the society could agree to them.

One resident worried the fees would start a trend.

Out of 11 Relays in the southeast region, only one location charges a fee and that's $100, Donze said.

But school committee member Betsy Connolly, who praised the Relay for Life, said the school department had to look for ways to cover expenses incurred at events.

"Part of our dilemma is that the school system is without funds," she said. "We do not have enough money for building maintenance. Our budget is bare bones."

Garrett Bradley of Hingham publicly pledged at the meeting to pay the $150 fee. Bradley is seeking the Democratic Party nomination to run for state representative of the Third Plymouth District, the seat currently held by Mary Jeanette Murray of Cohasset.

Selectmen nix funding for call firefighter force

"Only one of them had reservations about the pool being reduced to $15,000. I don't think that's too much to ask for people who are so dedicated."

Callahan said the willingness of the call firefighters to take a reduction in pay supports his notion of the call force continuing as a volunteer operation.

"Very little of their presentation had to do with money," Callahan said of the call firefighters' appearance before selectmen. "They admitted they don't do this for the money. They do it because they love it. I'd like to express our strong recommendation to the fire department that they work with the call department as a volunteer force."

All call firefighters are CPR-trained, which Sullivan said was an invaluable service to residents.

"Sometimes the call firefighters get to a scene before the fire department does," she said. "It's important to have someone on the scene quickly who knows CPR.

Haddad said police officers, not call firefighters, are the first to arrive to the scene of any fire or medical call.

"Every single police officer is CPR-trained and a first-responder," Haddad said. "They're the first people on the scene."

Koed suggested $15,000 be taken from free cash to pay the call firefighters, but Haddad said he was uncomfortable with using money in the operating budget which is reserved to pay future debts.

Sullivan said making the call firefighters a volunteer organization is an affront to the dedication they've shown the town.

"You want them to go into a burning house and risk their lives, and you won't even give them 15 cents?" she said.

McMorris said the cut in funding for the call force is a manifestation of policy decisions the town has made in its emergency services.

"I don't think this decision takes away from what the call force has given the town," she said. "It's simply a tough choice between paying the call force and having professional paramedics on board."

Aide positions may get the budget ax

Without the addition of a kindergarten and third-grade teacher at the Osgood next year, average class sizes would be in the mid-20s at the kindergarten level and there would 28 students in third-grade classes, DeGiacomo said.

The school committee hopes a combination of volunteers and teachers can make up for the loss of activity aides at recess and lunches.

Osgood Principal Marilee Cantelmo and Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan were not high on the idea of losing aides. They said volunteers are not as reliable and would not provide the continuity. There are also issues about confidentiality relating to students that would need to be addressed.

Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the decision to cut aides was a difficult one.

He said, however, that in tough times, the schools have to be creative.

DeGiacomo asked the principals to look over the line items of the budget and bring back any suggestions to the Feb. 3 committee meeting.

"We'll vote on the bottom line tonight and give the principals a week to come back (with suggestions) before we vote the final, line-item budget," DeGiacomo said.

Middle-high school principal Curtis Collins said he needed another science teacher next year but the school committee did not offer any money for the position.

"We're either going to lose programs or have an increase in class sizes," he said.

Collins said he would put academics first.

"I have to tell you in advance, there is no painless solution," he said about finding the money in his budget for the teaching post.

The school committee will finalize its budget during its meeting starting at 7:30 p.m., tonight (Thursday) at the middle-high school library.

$300K still outside the budget

The school committee approved a $9.24 million budget last week that is expected to be about $300,000 less than what the schools will need.

The shortfall — which is subject to change depending on state aid figures and other factors — will likely be made up with free cash in the fall.

This would avoid the need for an operating budget override this spring, which, officials think, would jeopardize passage of an estimated $40 million debt exclusion to pay for rehabilitation of the Deer Hill and middle-high schools. The $300,000 expected shortfall is being attributed to soaring special education costs.

Village station debate put off

Chamber of Commerce program to upgrade infrastructure in the village and harbor.

"In the opinion of the planning board, the downtown station and attendant parking are vital to the revitalization of the village and the funding of the program," Moore wrote.

At Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested a meeting in an auditorium to debate the issue, saying he didn't feel the selectmen's meeting room was large enough to discuss an issue which would interest many a large number of residents.

Haddad suggested a meeting on Wed., Feb. 16, so selectmen may continue to use their regular Tuesday meetings to work on the warrant for the Mar. 25 annual town meeting. Haddad said he has to get the warrant to the printer by the beginning of March to have enough time to distribute copies to the town's registered voters.

Selectman Thomas Callahan said he saw no need for a special meeting on which the location of the Greenbush station would be the only issue.

"I think we should have it on a regular meeting night after we're done discussing the warrant," Callahan said. "I don't think it should take the planning board an hour and a half to state their case."

Fellow selectman Ronnie McMorris said selectmen are not agreeing to reconsider their vote simply because they hear the planning board's proposal.

"The planning board is saying there's a new issue to consider with the village revitalization," McMorris said. "I want to make it clear that we're not having them at the meeting so we can make another vote."

Selectmen asked Haddad to put the planning board's presentation on a village station on the agenda for its Mar. 7 or Mar. 14 meeting.

Henry shines for Bowdoin

The Bowdoin College men's soccer team finished the season with a 7-5-2 record and was ranked for most of the season in the New England region of the National Soccer Coaches Association of America (NSCAA) weekly poll, helped by the play of senior Eric Henry. Henry played every game at midfield for the Polar Bears during the season.

Coming off the bench for the Polar Bears in every game in the midfield, Henry was a big part of Bowdoin's success offensively and defensively. On offense, Henry ended the season with one goal, as he scored in the Polar Bears' 4-0 victory over New England Small College Athletic Conference foe Tufts. Henry scored three goals in his three-year career (he spent his junior season abroad).

Defensively, Henry was outstanding as well. He helped Bowdoin hold opponents to just 0.68 goals per game along with six shutouts. The Polar Bears allowed more than one goal just twice during the season.

"Eric provided us with an experienced and talented player off the bench," said Bowdoin head coach Tim Gilbride, who recorded his 100th win this season. "In his career, he has played at every position on the field and has been very valuable to us. He is an outstanding leader as well."

Playing in the competitive New England Small College Athletic Conference (NESCAC), Bowdoin started the season with a 6-2-1 mark and moved as high as No. 4 in the NSCAA weekly poll. A 1-3-1 finish to the season halted the Polar Bears' two-year streak of earning a berth in the NCAA Division III national tournament.

A 1996 graduate of Cohasset High School, Henry was a South Shore League All-Star in soccer his senior year and was the MVP of his team.

Skippers face iron of the SSL

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Skippers faced a five day stretch last week, in which they tipped off against three of the league's toughest opponents.

The best game of the three, a 70-67 loss, took place in Carver. Having defeated Carver in their previous meeting with a double digit win, the Skippers were tied at halftime. However, Carver came out of the break to score the game's next six points.

"[The game] was pretty even from start to finish," said coach Ron Ford. "That six point lead was the highest in the game for either team."

Cohasset made a run later in the second half, amounting to a 51-47 lead, but Carver fought back over the next few minutes to knot it up at 63.

Even though Cohasset would have liked to emerge victorious from this contest, they were forced to settle for a 70-67 loss.

"What really killed us was rebounding," Ford noted. "Carver is a very big team, and we did not do a good enough job boxing out."

Carver held the rebounding edge 29-14.

Senior tri-captain Khalil Madyun scored 22 points and ripped down six rebounds to lead the Skippers. Junior Daniel Trowers paced the offense with controlled dribbling and very few mistakes.

"Khalil and Danny probably had their best games of the season," said Ford.

Another of the games was a Saturday night home contest against the Lancers of Norton. The first half was even, with both teams having a fair share of thrills. After the first 16 minutes, the score was tied 24-24.

In the second half, though, the Lancers pulled away, amassing a lead that reached as high as 12. The Skippers did their best to make a run at the lead, but could not reduce the lead to less than six points, and eventually lost 63-54.

"Norton was the more aggressive team," said Ford. "We played hard, but we did not get any breaks."

Madyun again led the balanced offensive attack with seven points, eight rebounds and four blocks.

"Khalil has put together two very good games in a row," said credited.

Other top performances included 11 points from junior Erik Shea, who started in place of captain Craig Parker to counterbalance Norton's four guard offense, and junior T.J. Bilodeau, who recorded nine points and three assists.

The last game in the triad was in Hanover, the same team that dominated in their last meeting 73-48.

This contest was not very different, as the 12-4 Indians cruised to a 63-41 victory.

"We are 3-10," summed up Ford. "But as long as we keep playing hard, I'm fine. These kids don't quit, and they are not rolling over."

Flu bug is teams' biggest foe

EXTRA POINTS

ANDREW MAHONEY

It's that time of the year again. The unseasonably warm weather had some people convinced that winter wasn't coming, but the snow and freezing weather finally came and everyone knows winter is here now.

For some, it can be a difficult time, coming off the high from the holidays and realizing that spring is still a good six weeks away. For high school coaches that have to worry about their teams, winter brings about another set of problems.

Before the first snow flake even touched the ground, there was the flu. This has been one of the more talked about flu seasons in recent history. Hospitals have been flooded with patients, while their doctors haven't even been immune to getting sick. The bug has made its way through various offices, leaving empty cubicles in its wake.

If you think it's tough trying to stay healthy while your co-workers are getting sick, try going out to lunch with them everyday, followed by a trip to the gym with 20 other co-workers for an intense workout. Then shower and get dressed again in close quarters and what do you get? How about germapalooza. That's what high school coaches are confronted with.

"I try to stress upon them about wearing hats and jackets after practices and games. They never get themselves dressed properly because they're so hot from the practice or the game," said Hanover High hockey coach Jim Sylvia.

It can be a disaster waiting to happen, as the Scituate High girls basketball team found out. The Sailors already faced an uphill battle, playing in the always tough Patriot League with a young team.

The team was so ravaged by the flu at one point that Sailors coach Joe Strazdes just sent his team home from practice over the holidays to rest up. It's an idea that seems to work as the squad returned from the break to win its next two games.

"We tell the kids to stay home," said Silver Lake girls basketball coach Dick Steele. "They're not gonna win a medal. We don't try to push them. It's not the end of the world. We want them to get better. There's no rules about having to practice to play in the games."

The players stand a better chance of a faster recovery if they stay at home than if they went to practice, plus they won't give everyone else their germs.

> "Knock on wood, we haven't been hit like some teams."
> Coach Ron Ford

"We want them to be honest with us," said Steele. "They're not gonna do us any good hanging around the gym on the sidelines."

At this time of year, everyone is particularly susceptible to viruses, especially athletes.

"It's hard for them to keep away from each other," said Steele. "They're passing the water around. We tell them to put on their sweats and their jackets, but they think their invincible."

The crazy New England weather is also a factor.

"During the flu season, we want the kids to keep themselves bundled up," said Sylvia. "It doesn't help that it can be in the 50's one day, the 20's the next, and then back up into the 50's. The kids are all using the same water bottles and are changing in tiny locker rooms. They want to shake it, and we tell them to plan and dress accordingly. They try to keep their bottles clean, but germs get passed."

Not even coaches can avoid the bug. Scituate High hockey coach Peter Cooney missed three days of work and practices due to the flu, but was back on the bench for the end of the week.

"Knock on wood, we haven't been hit like some teams," said Cohasset boys basketball coach Ron Ford. "We do our best to keep the bottles clean. If a kid starts to get sick, I send him home. I want him to stay far away from us. I even sent my 30-second shot clock kid home early one night."

With teams making a run for the playoffs at the halfway mark of their schedule, the coaches can only hope that the flu has reached the offseason.

Little League sign-up

Registration for the 2000 Little League baseball and softball season will be held on Saturday, Feb. 5 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Cohasset Middle High School, and on Feb. 12 from 9 a.m. to noon at the Deer Hill School. All players (including players who are already on a major league team) must sign up.

In addition to completing a registration form and paying the registration fee, parents are also required to provide a copy of the player's birth certificate if one has not been previously supplied. Registration is open to all children who will be at least five years old by Aug. 1, 2000.

of Chatterton. "But you can feel it in the stories his students, athletes, fellow teachers, friends and family relate with warmth and respect and with lots of good humor.

"Good humor, for Clark does it all — for the fun of it, the enjoyment, no glory."

A selection committee consisting of Glenn Pratt of 482 King St., Robert M. Davenport of 17 Black Horse Lane, Marion Douglas of 404 Beechwood St. and Cohasset Mariner editor Mary Ford selected Chatterton for the seventh annual Citizen of the Year award from a field of 15 nominations submitted by 27 different individuals and families.

After just a few minutes with Chatterton — who seems to know and like everyone — it's hard to believe he wasn't born in Cohasset, a place he has called home for 50 years. He came to town from Cambridge when he was in the fourth grade. His late father, Frank Chatterton, was pastor of the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset for 22 years until he retired in 1972. His mother, Mimi, still lives with Chatterton and his wife of 37 years, Sallyann, in the addition they built on their Red Gate Lane home for his parents when Frank retired. Their home is just a few houses away from the parsonage where Chatterton grew up with his sister Ann.

> "You won't find it in his job description — all the things he does."
> — Dr. Roger Pompeo is his nomination of Clark Chatterton

Chatterton, who talks about the character and integrity in others he respects, is a true family man.

"Every waking second of our whole lives revolves around our children and grandchildren," he said proudly pointing to a large photograph of granddaughters Kelsie, 10, and Tori, 4, that adorns his office wall.

But it's his extended family that includes the entire school and sports community, town officials and friends that has endeared Chatterton to so many.

Chatterton, the father of two, just shrugs when presented with a list of his good deeds. Those may include taking a great group of students out en masse to dinner, helping a METCO student out with rides, meals or counseling and coaching a girls' team without hesitation at a time when girls sports were given a back seat.

"Anybody would do that," he said.

And then there are the reunions, testimonials and retirement parties over the years that Chatterton has organized. He's also helped raise money for many causes including the new high school athletic field and the American Cancer Society.

"He's the best fund-raiser and the best fun raiser, I've ever known," Pompeo said.

Ironically it was through his work with the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life at Alumni Field that Chatterton showed he also possesses deep courage.

It was two years ago this week that Chatterton was diagnosed with bladder cancer. The year before he had been recruited to help organize the first Relay for Life at the brand-new high school track and the following January, the society presented him with a plaque to thank him for his efforts.

"They didn't have to thank me so much, that they brought me into the society," he joked about the fact his cancer was diagnosed two weeks later.

That spring he was at the event but without his familiar head of blonde hair that was a casualty to chemotherapy treatments. Now his hair is back, his cancer is in remission and Chatterton is busy focusing on others.

"I've grown to love my oncologist," laughed Chatterton. "I see him every four months for checkups."

Chatterton's fight with cancer may have helped save a few lives. Armed with the news, others at the middle-high school went to get check ups and several were subsequently diagnosed with the disease.

Back in 1996 when the new Osgood School project was in trouble, it was Chatterton — in a controversial move at the time — who tapped into his own savings to give the school department a loan. An override for the project was defeated and money was needed to keep the project plans afloat until a new vote could be taken.

"My mother and I were at the swing set behind the old Osgood School with one of my granddaughters," Chatterton recalled. "I said, 'mother, look at the school. It hasn't changed. It still has the same water bubbler outside.'

"I was glad I could do my part to get the new school built," he said.

It may be a baseball great that Cohasset has to thank for keeping Chatterton within its borders. A graduate of the CHS Class of 1959, Chatterton, an outfielder, headed to Florida for two winters to try his hand at professional baseball.

"I was no Ted Williams," Chatterton recalled. "But it was a great experience. I had five swings (in a tryout) in front of Casey Stengel. It was 1961 and the Mets were a new team."

Chatterton gave up his baseball dream, got married and returned to college.

He also started working summers at the concession at the South Shore Music Circus and took the concession business over a couple of years later. And now after nearly 40 years, he considers the music circus family and has many fond memories.

"Being in the theater I've seen so much," he said. "Bob Hope, Perry Como, Liberace — I've met them all."

Earlier this month, Chatterton was named District C Athletic Director of the Year by the Massachusetts Secondary School Athletic Directors Association. It's presented annually to an athletic director in each of the eight districts who displays the qualities of outstanding leadership and meritorious achievement. Chatterton is proud of that award and is deeply humbled by the Citizen of the Year award.

"I'm honored to be in such an illustrious group," he said about prior year Citizens of the Year that include Gerard Keating, Dr. Robert Sceery, the Rev. Gary Ritts, Joseph D. Buckley, Katharine Stanton and Anna Abbruzzese. "The town means to much to me and I've learned so much from so many people."

But what touched Chatterton's heart the most was his 87-year-old mother's reaction when she heard the news on Sunday.

"My mother was just ecstatic," he said. "I'm 58 and am so fortunate to still have a mother enjoying her son. That meant so much more to me than the Super Bowl."

Chatterton will be honored this spring at a special reception hosted by the Cohasset Mariner at Kimball's by the Sea.

Abutters want improved look for treatment plant

Sewer commission amenable to suggestions

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The town's new sewage treatment plant will soon be a reality, but abutters of the facility want the aesthetics improved before it is completed.

A group of about 20 abutters to the plant, which is located behind a group of houses across from the police and fire station on Elm Street, came to Monday night's sewer commission meeting to suggest enhancements to its appearance.

Howie Althos, 80 Summer St., spoke to the sewer commission on behalf of the residents.

"We've been talking informally and we're concerned about the look of the treatment plant," Althos said. "Whether the view of the plant is from St. Anthony's, the library, or a private home, we want it to be done in a way that everyone can be proud of."

"Whether the view of the plant is from St. Anthony's, the library, or a private home, we want it to be done in a way that everyone can be proud of."
— Howie Althos, 80 Summer St.

The sewage treatment plant will consist of three structures: a square, cinderblock building, the treatment building itself, which is a metal-sided, pre-manufactured, industrial building, and a rectangular, concrete tank.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil said the commission is amenable to improving the plant's aesthetics, but reminded abutters of time constraints it faces in completing the project.

"We're under an obligation to be complete by June 30, and there are stringent penalties if we're not done by then," Vanderweil said. "But if we can make things look better to abutters by that deadline, we're willing to do that."

The view of the new treatment plant that abutters complained about at Monday's sewer commission meeting.

The town is under a court order to solve its waste water woes. The agreement with the state includes the current sewer projects underway in North Cohasset, the central sewer district, and Lily Pond, and upgrading the treatment plant.

Barbara Power, 74 Beach St., said the area where the treatment plant sits is visible from a number of spots in town and shouldn't be an eyesore.

"The plant is in a very important open space, probably the most observed in town," Power said. "It's in a beautiful, beautiful marsh. We're simply suggesting some enhancements so it will look good out there."

Residents suggested improvements to the main, metal-sided building such as clapboards, vinyl siding, cedar shingles, or real windows. Plantings were suggested to help screen the treatment facility.

"Vines on the chain line fence around the plant could really make things look better," said Joanne Chittick, 98 S. Main St., who brought along a picture she had painted of the plant with some of the residents' suggested improvements included.

Vanderweil said the treatment plant project was contracted early last year, and was developed over the course of public meetings which went back several years.

Althos said the residents understand the need for the plant and support its purpose. He said a cooperative effort between abutters and the sewer commission could make the town's residents more supportive of future municipal projects.

"This could serve as an example for future projects," Althos said. "By opening up a dialogue, we can increase people's confidence about town projects."

Vanderweil said funding for plantings had been included in the original contingency costs of the project. He said additional contingency monies could possibly be used to fund aesthetic improvements to the plant itself.

"To the extent contingencies aren't used up, they could be applied to this," he told abutters. "We'll work with you on this to find out what the costs are."

Because the group of approximately 20 residents who appeared at the meeting was so large, Vanderweil suggested a smaller committee of residents be formed to study the costs of materials which could be used to improve the look of the plant. He suggested the group return to the sewer commission's next meeting on Mar. 13 to discuss its findings.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN
by Kathleen Fox ASID

ALL IN THE DETAILS

Architects and decorators have long turned to embellishment to add flair to plain rooms. In the past, this meant commissioning a master craftsman skilled in the craft of plasterwork. Today, however, there are a variety of ready-made adornments that can transform ordinary spaces into richly ornamented spaces. Cast plaster pieces which are somewhat delicate, are usually reserved for decorations that are placed on or near the ceiling. Plaster crown mouldings and ceiling medallions are prized for their sharp detail. Wood elements are durable and convey a feeling of warmth. The most prized of these are milled or carved from premium hardwoods. Lastly, polymer products provide the most design versatility at relatively little expense. Because these mouldings are very light weight, a detailed crown can be made and installed in one piece rather than the many layers and steps required with wood.

At the DESIGNING WOMAN we can take the mystery out of creating beautiful and functional living spaces. We stay current with the latest decorating techniques and share them with customers so that they can consider all their options before making decisions. Our goal is to work with you to create a thoughtful and individualized design plan and coordinate colors, patterns, and fabrics. Do you work from your home? We can create a comfortable work space that meets your needs. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: The term "applique" refers to a small, purely decorative flourish attached to a wall or ceiling.

Call fire force saved

$15K restored in budget

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Call firefighters came to their own rescue Tuesday night, showing up at the selectmen's meeting with two petitions to restore funding for the call fire department.

After receiving the petitions, selectmen unanimously voted to restore $15,000 in funding for the call fire department after Town Manager Mark Haddad suggested cutting $15,000 from the town fire department's overtime budget to fund the initiative.

"We're fighters, and we don't give up."
— Call firefighter Bruce Pratt

Last week, selectmen voted 3-2 to eliminate the call department, citing the need to use the money to help offset the $188,685 cost in FY 2001 of the four firefighter/paramedics appropriated by voters at last December's special town meeting.

During the public comment period at Tuesday's selectmen's meeting, about six call firefighters came to Town Hall to present selectmen with the petitions, each signed by approximately 500 Cohasset residents.

Sailing along

Retiree has passion for unique sport

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Whenever he can during the winter, 75-year old Cohasset resident John Hartshorne straps on a pair of ice skates and heads down to a frozen-over Lily Pond to do some skating.

Nothing unusual there. Unlike the others, however, Hartshorne grabs hold of a 65 square-foot sail when he skates.

The tall, fit Hartshorne is an enthusiast of the little-known sport of skate-sailing, in which a person can skate several times the speed of the wind as a result of wind pushing against the sail.

Two crisscrossing wooden posts, the mast and boom, traverse the sail. Skate-sailors hold the mast, which goes vertically, and lean back against the horizontal boom. The skate-sailor is pushed forward as the wind hits the sail.

"The harder the wind, the more you want to lean into it," Hartshorne said. "The sail is very maneuverable and allows you to go quite fast. Even on Lily Pond, which isn't that big, I can still get up to speeds of 30 to 35 miles an hour."

Hartshorne has been skate-sailing for over 60 years, since he was about eight years old. He grew up in New Jersey, home to the Skate-Sailing Association of America [SSAA], and the state with the largest amount of skate-sailors.

"The high elevations in the northern part of the state, where I grew up, are great for skate-sailing," Hartshorne explained. "There isn't a lot of snow, so the ice is clear and good for skating long distances."

The entire SSAA only has about 150 members, including eight from Massachusetts. While the sport is unique, Hartshorne learned about it in a way familiar to many children.

Like millions of young boys and girls, Hartshorne learned the ins and outs of his favorite sport from his father. In fact, he still uses his father's

School custodian nervous about proposed changes

Bids from cleaning companies to be opened today

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

John Danielson of Scituate, the head custodian at the Osgood school, is nervous about a proposed move to use a private company to clean the town's schools.

The school committee has put out a Request for Proposals [RFP] to solicit bids from private cleaning companies to perform custodial services in the town's schools. Superintendent Edward Malvey was expected to open the sealed bids today.

In the RFP, any successful bidder is required to offer a job to the town's current custodians. Such a clause brought little security to Danielson, who said he expects a job with a private cleaning company to be less lucrative than his current position as a school custodian.

"I don't think I'd go work for a private cleaning company," Danielson said. "I don't believe there would be as much money and I don't think the benefits would be as great. In a couple of months, they could send me 40 miles away to go to work. I'm very displeased with the situation."

Town Manager Mark Haddad, who oversaw a transition from school custodians to cleaning services during his stint as town manager in Littleton, said the move is driven solely by cost concerns.

"We're talking about a cost savings in benefits and salaries," Haddad said. "This is a purely financial move. We did this in Littleton and it worked. The schools there are immaculate."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said his board has been looking to reduce the cost of cleaning the schools and decided a cleaning company might be a good alternative to custodians.

"This process has been under review for some time," DeGiacomo said. "We've been discussing how to save money in custodial services. Exploring the possibility of a private cleaning company is a business decision the school committee has made. If the bids show no cost savings, it's back to the drawing board."

Technology funds get nod

$150,000 would finance next phase of the project

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In coming years, Cohasset's schoolchildren may come home with even more computer knowledge with which to befuddle their elders.

Selectmen unanimously recommended a $150,000 warrant article Tuesday night to fund the next phase of the school department's technology plan. The school department originally proposed the article for last December's special town meeting, but delayed it until the spring at the request of Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"In the midst of the vote on a possible school construction project last fall, we agreed to table the technology funds until spring after talking to the town manager," said superintendent Edward Malvey.

The first funds appropriated for the school technology plan were the $250,000 for infrastructure work at the 1997 fall special town meeting.

In October 1998, voters appropriated $350,000 for the next phase of the plan, but $150,000 of those funds were given back to help offset a deficit in the special education budget. That $150,000 figure is what school administrators are seeking to get back at the Mar. 25 annual town meeting to continue the technology plan.

"If we're successful with a town meeting vote and an override on the school project, we can roll in this $150,000 in our application to the state."
School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

If appropriated, school technology chairman Ken Cisneros said the $150,000 will be used in each of the town's schools. At the high school, Cisneros said he is looking to add new computers to the math and science lab as well as two new computers for the library.

A new computer and printer is planned for each classroom in the middle school, while a presentation television is to be supplied to each classroom at Deer Hill. The presentation televisions will allow Deer Hill teachers to conduct multimedia presentations using the Microsoft PowerPoint software installed in computers in each classroom.

At Osgood, Cisneros plans to add 10 new computers to the school's computer lab and move the computers in the lab to classrooms. Rounding out Cisneros' wish list is a laptop and multimedia projector for the school system's central adminis-

Residential brush

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area until further notice. No trees larger than 12" in diameter. No contractors.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Lillard Field upgrade

Selectmen unanimously recommended a $23,000 article Tuesday night for the Mar. 25 annual town meeting to upgrade Lillard Field, which is behind Cohasset Middle-High School.

The $23,000 will be used to re-crown the field, which often holds water when it rains and to fix drainage problems which have been ongoing since Alumni Field was built.

Little League spokesman Mark DeGiacomo said upgrading the field is necessary for the town's youth sports programs to have enough fields on which to play.

"We're opening up a softball program for the first time this summer, which will add to the use of the town's three multi-use fields," DeGiacomo said. "Last year with baseball, we just gave up on Lillard field because it was unusable for a week whenever it rained."

Hagerty Park will wait

Though a permit from the Mass. Department of Waterways is in hand, the $126,000 needed to complete the park will not be sought by selectmen until the fall special town meeting.

The Hagerty Park project, including a dock, is estimated to cost $180,000, but the Hagerty committee already has $54,000 in hand.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said waiting until fall to seek funds from town meeting makes sense.

"You can't really do much construction down there during the summer months because so many people are down there," he said.

Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti said he thinks some of the work needed to be done, such as site cleanup, can be started on a volunteer basis without needing to with until fall.

Olde Salt House plans

Attorney Charles Humphreys, representing applicant Peter Roy, went before the zoning board of appeals [ZBA] Monday night to discuss plans for the reopening of the Olde Salt House, a restaurant at 44 Border St., next to Roy's Atlantica restaurant.

Plans call for a 96-seat outdoor seating area and a 28-seat indoor seating area inside the 800 square-foot building.

Humphreys tried to alleviate any concerns ZBA members might have had regarding the outdoor seating area, where alcohol consumption is permitted, saying the site will be well-monitored.

"There will be far more management, far more control than with the site's previous use," he said. "Peter [Roy] has put a great deal of time and effort into cleaning up this site.

Humphreys said the kitchen of the Olde Salt House will be moved to Atlantica and a door between the two restaurants will be eliminated and replaced with a service window.

ZBA member Ben Lacy wondered how an already crowded parking situation on Border Street could handle cars carrying the 96 people dining outdoors if the Salt House's outside area was filled to capacity.

"Supposing this is a success, what about the parking?" Lacy asked.

Humphreys said Roy's other holdings in the harbor will provide extra parking as needed.

"For both restaurants, we'll have a very heavy valet service," Humphreys said. "We can use the lot behind Kimball's, which can hold 60 or so cars valet-style."

The zoning board took the matter under advisement and will deliberate on the proposal at a future meeting.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Summer counselors at rec. department

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting applications for playground program counselor positions for their seven-week summer program for children ages 3 1/2 - 12. Applicants must be at least 18 years of age with demonstrated experience working with children in camp, sports or organizational environments.

Should you be interested working with children in a day camp structured program, call the Cohasset Recreation Department at 383-4109 for details and application form.

The Recreation Department is also accepting applications for sports/games program coordinators by calling the office.

Senior housing units in planning stages

Development slated for old Edison site

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

An opportunity may exist on the horizon for Cohasset senior citizens who wish to simplify their lives by moving into smaller homes in town.

Developer Noel Collins, a trustee of Gulph River Realty Trust, is planning a five-unit senior housing development at the old Edison site at 365 N. Main St. Collins said the units would be the first privately funded senior housing in Cohasset.

"For a period of six months, we're restricting the sale of these units to Cohasset residents 55 and older," Collins said of the planned development. "We want these units to be accessible to people wishing to downsize from large homes."

Collins said he expects to pre-sell the units, which will all be single-level condominiums. Not all units will be on the first floor, but an elevator is included in designs for the project. All units, which Collins said would average 1200 square feet, are to be completely handicapped-accessible.

Should the project be approved by town boards, those who buy the condominiums will be able to choose custom-designed floor plans and interiors, Collins said.

Collins said custom costs are an unknown quantity, making it difficult to pin down the exact cost of the units.

"We don't know what the custom costs will be, but we're looking to sell these units in the $250,000-$350,000 range," Collins said.

A hearing on the development was scheduled for Monday's zoning board of appeals meeting, but Collins told the board a site plan for the project has yet to be completed.

With a full plate of hearings and deliberations on Monday's agenda, zoning board chairman Woody Chittick asked Collins to return for a hearing in March. Collins said he will also meet with the planning board in March.

While the development is still in its infancy, selectman Ronnie McMorris, a member of the town's senior housing committee, was excited by the prospect of additional housing for the town's senior citizens.

"Even if it's only five units, that's five families that can stay in town," McMorris said. "We need a multi-faceted approach to senior housing. It's not going to be one big development that solves the problem. Any little pockets where we can place some senior housing units will help."

McMorris said the senior housing committee will meet with building commissioner Bob Egan to discuss the possibility of building senior housing at the "gravel pits" behind the Little League baseball field on N. Main St., a site many groups in town have been interested in over the years.

With the dearth of available space in town, Collins said he believes developers will have to work in conjunction with town boards to construct senior housing in Cohasset.

Building commissioner Bob Egan said the Edison site is zoned for one single-family residence, meaning Collins will need a variance to increase the density on the lot to accommodate five units.

"I sense that there is a market for senior housing here in Cohasset," Collins said. "We're looking for zoning relief from the town to make it happen."

Selectman Diane Sullivan, who has been outspoken about the need for more senior housing in town, said a five-unit development won't solve Cohasset's senior housing ills.

"It's a start, but it's not nearly enough," Sullivan said. "We've got to keep plugging away."

Three teaching positions added

But aides will be cut

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

The school department will add three new teaching positions next year and an afternoon bus run for kindergartners.

To squeeze the needed money from what is a level-funded $9.24 million budget apart from contractual salary increases — the school committee agreed to cut a technology aide at the Osgood School and two activity aides, one at Osgood and one at Deer Hill.

Additional money will come from the school-lunch subsidy that is no longer needed and through equipment and supply cuts at the middle-high school.

A kindergarten teacher will be added at Osgood and another teacher will be hired for the grade that has the most students, which will likely be the third grade, school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said. A science teacher will be added at the high school. The teacher salaries are estimated at $38,000 a piece.

The existing full-time technology teaching position currently at Deer Hill would be split between Deer Hill and Osgood next fall.

Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey said the school system would still have the services of two, full-time technology people. In addition to the Deer Hill teacher, Ken Cisneros is director of technology for Cohasset schools.

"This would be a short-term option," Malvey said. "We may need to expand later as more technology goes in."

The school committee voted unanimously to support Malvey's recommendation after a lengthy discussion.

Both elementary school principals, Paul Callahan at Deer Hill and Marilee Cantelmo at Osgood, were concerned about eliminating aides that help supervise children during lunch and at recess.

> "This would be a short-term option. We may need to expand later as more technology goes in."
> — Supt. Dr. Edward "Ted" Malvey on cutting a technology aide

Cantelmo offered to further cut supplies and eliminate conference money to save the aides. She said the technology aide played a role so great that in reality she was working as a teacher on an aide's salary.

"None of us likes the choices being offered," Callahan said.

At the middle-high school, principal Curt Collins is cutting back on equipment and supplies so a science teacher can be added.

Despite a plea from parent Adrienne McCarthy to nix the additional afternoon kindergarten bus run at a cost of $6,000, the school committee kept it in the budget.

"Right now is not the time to add it," McCarthy said. She said personnel and materials should take precedence and suggested the school department look at group bus stops rather than door-to-door stops to save time on the bus run.

But school committee members said they were responding to outraged parents who complained last fall that their kindergartners were on the bus for upwards of an hour.

There is about $41,000 "wiggle room" in the budget that Town Manager Mark Haddad asked the school committee to stick with. But the school committee needs an additional $78,000 to pay for the three new teaching positions and the kindergarten bus run for a total of about $120,000. The remainder of money will come from cutting the $23,750 technology aide position, eliminating one activity aide at both the Deer Hill and Osgood schools, eliminating the school lunch subsidy and through equipment and supply cuts at the middle-high school.

Task Force behind revitalization efforts

The Jan. 27 article about revitalization efforts in the village and harbor incorrectly attributed those efforts to the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce.

The Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF) is in charge of efforts to improve the harbor and village areas and has been since its inception in December 1997.

The Chamber hosted a presentation about the revitalization project at its 2000 annual meeting last month at the Atlantica restaurant, but is a completely separate organization from the VRTF and is not involved in organizing the revitalization efforts.

"The Chamber of Commerce is very interested in what the Task Force is doing, but we haven't taken a position on the revitalization project," said Chamber president David Drinkwater. "Once we get a consensus from members, we'll let the community and the Task Force know."

The Chamber is soliciting input from its members and encourages members to contact the Chamber at its internet address, come.to/cohasset.

All references in the Jan. 27 article which attributed the project to the Chamber were incorrect and should have been attributed to the VRTF.

The Mariner regrets the errors.

AROUND TOWN

IN 'WHO'S WHO'

Britt Covell, a 1999 graduate of Cohasset High School and a current sophomore at Johnson and Wales University, has been named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges." Britt completed her senior year and high school and freshman year at Johnson and Wales in the same year! She has been on the Dean's List every trimester since she has been at the Providence-based University. She is a candidate for an associates degree in Retail Fashion Merchandising and a bachelor's degree in Marketing and Management. In her "spare time," Britt works in the Brass Plum Department in the Providence Place Mall.

In his letter notifying Britt of the award, Director H. Pettus Randall stated, "Over the past 65 years, the Who's Who program has honored and rewarded the individual scholastic excellence of outstanding campus leaders. This prestigious award is one of the greatest honors given annually by the American academic community."

Congratulations, Britt!

DEAN'S LIST

Good news from Providence College — they tell us that Brian Riley, a 1996 graduate of Cohasset High School, made the Dean's List for the Fall Semester. Brian is a senior history major and all of us are very proud of him!

Keep up your superior work, Brian!

THE ANTARCTIC?

Although it may look like the Antarctic, it's actually Cohasset. That's Richard Harris sitting on the ice on the Gulph River (looking toward Border Street in Scituate) on Jan. 27.

OLD FRIEND VISITS

Sure was nice to see Sue Fone last week, everyone was so pleased! Looks wonderful, and her best friend Maggie (her dog) was a super hit in our house!

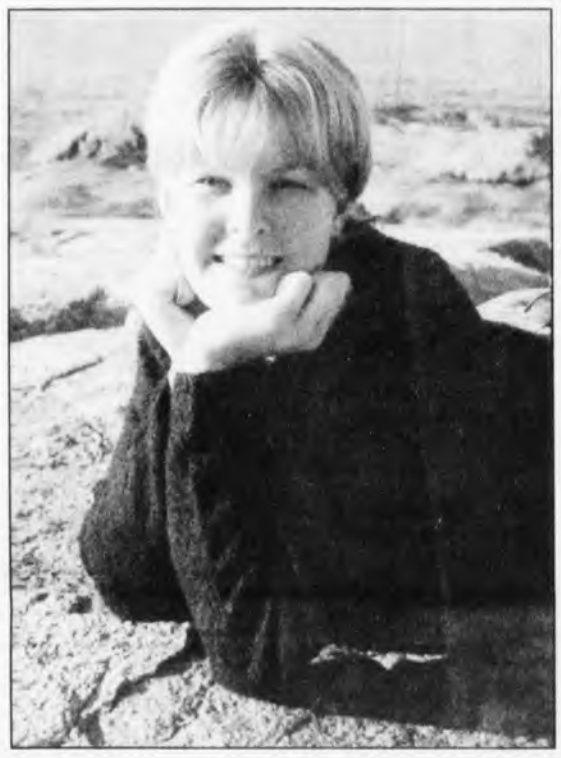
Come back soon, Sue!

CONSIGNMENT SHOP SALE

If your New Year's Resolution included saving money and/or volunteering for good causes, then Polly Logan and Andi Merrill suggest that you go to the famous annual sale at the Cohasset Consignment Shop!

Many "treasures" will be offered for men, women, children and infants at half price and up to 80 percent off! The sale will also include selected fur coats (this year we really need warmth!), leather jackets including some fur-lined, silver and gold jewelry, nice cashmere sweaters, Italian and English china, winter coats and slacks and blouses — the sale ends Sunday, Feb. 27, and then you can begin consigning Monday, Feb. 28.

Support them, and support your Social Service League at the same time! You will be glad (and happy) that you did!



Britt Covell of Cohasset is in "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges."

A FINE LADY

We all feel badly to report the death of Roberta Lehr, she passed away last month — she was a lovely woman — would do anything for anyone! She had a way of making you feel as though you were special, and, whenever there was a problem, she was there! She never "skipped a beat" — her musical talent was beyond belief!

A fine lady, one sadly missed! Our hearts go out to all of Roberta's family!

QUILT SHOW

Attention all of you quilt show people (what better winter to show them) — the 7th annual quilt show is about to take place, held at the Second Congregational Church — last year the committee ran out of food, tea, everything, because they were so crowded! Well, it is a breath of spring to see these beautiful quilts, and March 4 is right around the corner, so, make your ticket available today!

School committee

It's rare when an open seat on the board of selectmen doesn't attract interest. And this year is no exception as two potential candidates Robert Sturdy and Leland Jenkins have already pulled papers. Former selectman Michael H. Sullivan, who did not seek reelection to a third term two years ago, said this week he hasn't ruled out a run for the seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan. Mrs. Sullivan is not seeking a second term. So it looks like a healthy race is shaping up for selectman. And therefore, you — the voters and taxpayers — will all ultimately benefit.

But the school committee is an entirely different matter. Charged with responsibility for more than a $9 million annual budget and setting educational policy for schoolchildren, the school committee is a very important board

Yet, it's tough to find candidates to run to for the open seats and even harder to keep anyone on board for more than one term.

So far former advisory committee member Rick Flynn is the only one to pull papers for one of two openings on the school committee, as incumbents Kathy Ofsthun and Betsy Connolly are not seeking reelection. Mrs. Connolly was elected last year to fill the remaining year of Joe McElroy's unexpired term.

While we have no doubt another fine school committee candidate will come forward before Thursday Feb. 17, the last day to take out nomination papers — elections are so much more interesting when there's a contest.

Just look at the Republicans running for their party's nomination for president — the crowded field there has helped sharpen the issues and heighten the debate.

Over the past few years, school board members including Ken Wilcox, Jim Kirk, JoAnn Chittick, Maureen Jerz, Rick Shea and now Kathy Ofsthun have decided to step down after serving a single term. We can't blame them. Three years can seem like a long time and they all worked hard under some very demanding circumstances, including building a new school and hiring a new superintendent.

So again, this year the school board is looking for new blood to fill its ranks. Being a parent of school-age children is not a requirement. We'd like to send out a call for a senior citizen or two to throw their hats into the ring. There's plenty of room on a five-member board for someone with their perspective on life.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Village station

DEAR SELECTMEN:

We, the undersigned, urge you to look favorably upon a Village site for the railroad station, if one is to be built at all, for two main reasons:

1. It will help to revitalize our downtown area by attracting large numbers of people to the Village several times a day;

2. It will enable us to travel to Boston on foot, as it were, by walking to the Village and taking the train. We will be completely independent of the automobile, which we foresee will be a boon to us as "Senior Citizens."

Thank you for your consideration.

John and Mary Hartshorne
115 Border St.

Editor's note: This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Station hearing

TO THE EDITOR:

The board of selectmen should reverse its decision and have the Feb. 15 train station hearing in town hall auditorium as proposed by Mr. Haddad. It's the selectmen's responsibility to make solid decisions on facts not straw polls.

As Jim Watson wrote in the Mariner last week "—it would be a shame for the next 100 years people would wonder as the train buzzes through the center of town why we didn't have the foresight to plan the station where it would best serve our townspeople." Well said!

Call firefighters

DEAR SELECTMEN:

As a former Cohasset resident and a call firefighter for three years in the town of Amherst, I am disturbed by the recent discussion regarding the elimination of Cohasset's call firefighters. Despite living away from Cohasset, I have followed this matter in the Mariner and the Patriot Ledger, and with each article I grow more agitated.

I agree that the Town should hire four firefighters/paramedics. Paramedics provide advanced care that is truly life giving, and their service to the town will be well worth the extra cost. However, Town Manager Mark Haddad's proposal to eliminate the call firefighters as a way to offset this extra cost is ridiculously short sighted and insulting to the men and women who selflessly provide this service. I challenge him to find a better value for the skills and manpower than the call firefighters provide.

Call firefighters provide service to the community around the clock throughout the year. Perhaps you recall the tragic fire in Maine two weeks ago that claimed the lives of three children and one call firefighter. The firefighter who died was on his way to his own birthday party with his children when he got called to the fire. After arrival, he suffered a heart attack while supplying water to the fire scene. These are the harsh realities that call firefighters in Cohasset and elsewhere accept as part of the job.

A Boston firefighter once told me that when he was training for the job, his trainer told him to never frown on call firefighting because call firefighters do the same job for little or no pay. In fact, many call firefighters do indeed perform their job for no pay at all. I'm sure that you selectmen would do your job for free, given the long hours that you put in for little compensation. We all know that public service of our kind has nothing to do with money. However, the money is a sign of support and appreciation, and if it is taken away in this manner, morale will be damaged throughout the fire department.

This fiasco has gone on long enough. Although the Selectmen delayed a decision on this until after they had spoken with the call firefighters, I am very disappointed that this proposal has been allowed to proceed thus far. In the Town of Amherst, call firefighters work alongside career firefighters/paramedics with very little conflict. We provide station coverage to the Town when the regular shifts of career firefighters are stretched thin. We respond with ambulances, engines, and the ladder truck on a regular basis. In Amherst, call firefighters are respected and given responsibility, and we value that more than any paycheck at the end of the month. Town Manager Haddad needs to seriously rethink this proposal and all of the Selectmen need to support the call firefighters of Cohasset.

A life saved

CHIEF ROGER LINCOLN:

It is New Year's Day and my family have all gone to bed. With the exception of my dog, Jake, I am alone thinking about the day we just celebrated. My thoughts wonder back about nine months and I realize that I have procrastinated too long. Writing is not my strong suit, and under these conditions, it is even more of a test. Nevertheless, I am writing to you in the hope that this letter will be entered into the files of two of your firefighters. Without the efforts of these two young men, I would not be here on New Year's. I would be dead. On Friday, April 23, 1999, at 9 a.m. at Curtis Liquor Store in Cohasset, I suffered a major heart attack and was dead before I hit the office floor. God blessed me twice, first firefighter/EMT Ian Fitzpatrick was working with me on site at the store, and second, Rich Bonano, an off-duty firefighter/EMT instructor, was up the road when he heard the 911 call. The quick thinking and tremendous work they performed on me during those critical minutes were truly life saving. Having no vitals, they revived me for the four minutes until help arrived.

My family and I have much to be thankful for tonight, but we owe every minute of the last nine months to two of your courageous and dedicated volunteer firefighters. So, from the bottom of my heart, thank you, Ian Fitzpatrick, Richard Bonano, Roger Lincoln, Cohasset Fire &Rescue, South Shore Hospital and Beth Israel Hospital.

Joseph J. Gagne
Manager, Curtis Liquors-Cohasset

PS: I am most distressed by the news that Cohasset is considering dropping their call Fire Department, of which both of my rescuers were members, for obvious reasons. I know that there are many reasons involved with your decision. However, if I may pose a question: How many homes, and lives, like mine, does Cohasset put at risk by this decision?

This letter was in selectmen's correspondence.

Chinese New Year

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you to everyone who supported the Cohasset School Organization's Chinese New Year Celebration auction last Saturday evening. It is impossible to thank individually all the people who contributed to its success including local businesses who donated products and services, the more than 200 parents and friends who attended the auction, and the tireless work of tens of volunteers who made it happen. Thank you also to St.Stephen's Episcopal Church for allowing us to transform your fellowship hall. It is always gratifying to see so many people come together for such an important cause.

With the funds raised through this event, and others throughout the year, the PSO will be able to continue to support all four schools in many ways. In the past, curriculum enhancements such as maps, videos, workbooks, software, cameras, television monitors and whiteboards have been purchased We also fund METCO programs, speakers and assemblies on nature and history. Volunteers through the PSO, maintain nature trails and donate time and materials for cleanup and beautification of our schools.

There's a place for every parent in our organization. For more information on how you can continue to support the PSO with time or resources, contact any board member whose names appear on the school calendar.

Nancy B. Hertig
President, Cohasset PSO

School cleaning

TO THE EDITOR:

Bids for cleaning companies to take over the cleaning of Cohasset Public Schools will be publicly announced Feb. 10. Town manager Mark Haddad allegedly thinks this is the answer to the problem with the current conditions of our schools because it worked where he came from.

Education is our tradition, our future

EDUCATION MATTERS

KATHY OFSTHUN

Education matters – well, no one's going to argue with that. How good do we want to be? How do you achieve that level and measure it? Where do we prioritize spending? Those are the points of difference. After three years on the School Committee, I have tremendous appreciation for the historic and continuing efforts to address those broad questions and the subsequent implementation of tactical plans that have achieved our objectives.

Cohasset has historically valued education highly and supported its teaching staff, programs and facilities. Among other things, a new teachers' contract, the new Osgood school and the track and field attest to this. In turn, the schools have performed well, are top rated and contribute significantly to the town's reputation.

The students that Cohasset's schools turn out achieve well on any objective measure:

The high school rated first in state on the 1999 MCAS, and the district ranked 14th;

Cohasset's SAT scores are in the top 20 percent of the Commonwealth, with a remarkable 100 percent participation;

College acceptance lists rival those of private schools;

Our athletic teams were awarded the trophy for Best Sportsmanship for the entire South Shore District in 1999.

Education Reform mandates less decision making by school committees and grants more authority to educators in support of site based management. Cohasset has every good reason to put our faith in our administrators and teachers. We have a strong experienced teaching staff that is very committed, despite pay scales that have only recently caught up to average for our geographic area.

All of our principals and the superintendent came in as new in the last five years. Curt Collins, at the Middle-High School, was hired subsequent to being named "Principal of the Year" in Massachusetts. This strong administration has implemented a variety of curricular improvements including the successful middle school philosophy, block scheduling, team teaching, a more rigorous elementary math program, library improvements and the integration of technology into research and learning.

As Cohasset moves forward with many necessary projects such as the sewers, library and additions for fire department equipment and personnel, let us also continue to support education. It is our tradition and our future, and benefits all of Cohasset's citizens.

Thank you for allowing me to serve on Cohasset's School Committee. Though sometimes a trial, it was always rewarding.

Football with an attitude

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where the World Wrestling Federation is about to bring us a new and better professional football league.

Just what we need.

I can recall a time when a few football players used to appear without fanfare on a field of natural grass in mid-September, play a few games — the last one for the championship — and we'd all be home in time for the Thanksgiving turkey.

Now a whole lot of football players start training camp in mid-July and play more than a few games until the artificial turf freezes over. Then we all get a month or two to rest our eyeballs before they start the whole thing all over again.

And now the WWF wants to take those months of relaxation away from us.

The XFL, as the new league has been named

"We're bringing back old fashioned, smash-mouth football but with cutting edge marketing and production values. It'll be football with an attitude."

— Vince McMahon

by its founder, the entrepreneur Vince McMahon, will commence play in the winter of 2001 when the NFL's Super Bowl is out of the way.

It promises to have teams in eight cities, New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Miami, Orlando, Washington and two more cities yet to be named. Relax, one of them is not Boston.

It also promises to bring FUN! back to the grand old game.

"The NFL has become too conservative, too corporate with too much regulation," said McMahon, whose PR genius has made the WWF a billion dollar corporation that is traded on the NASDAQ.

"We're bringing back old fashioned, smash-mouth football but with cutting edge marketing and production values. It'll be football with an attitude."

It should be noted that the news conference at which the new league was announced was covered by the Wall Street Journal, the financial Bloomberg News and Access Hollywood magazine as well as the New York football writers.

What can the fans expect from the XFL?

"This will be real American football, but with a lot more fun and a lot more attitude," said McMahon, "Our wrestling product is 100 per cent entertainment. The XFL will be 100 per cent sport. The entertainment will be in the way we cover it."

They will cover it by putting TV cameras in the dressing rooms and huddles, presumably with seven second tape delays to protect innocent young ears. Coaches will be wired for sound on the sidelines, presumably with longer tape delays.

Fragile quarterbacks will be fair game for 300-pound defensive linemen, which probably means Hulk Hogan will eventually call signals for the Los Angeles team and Rowdy Roddy Piper for Orlando. Doug Flutie, stay home and watch.

Showboating will not only be permitted, it will be encouraged. The wide receiver who catches a touchdown pass can dance all he wants in the end zone and the lineman who sacks the quarterback can place his foot on his neck and beat his chest like Tarzan. But the game will have to end after three hours, no matter how much fun we're having.

The XFL will stand for the "Xtra Fun League," said Mahon, while the NFL is the "No Fun League."

I can see six TV networks and untold cable stations lining up now to show "football with an attitude."

HEALTH NOTES

Most children are improperly restrained

Traffic crashes are the leading cause of death for children of every age from 6 to 14 years – a fact that can be linked, at least in part, to the reality that most kids are unbuckled or improperly restrained in vehicles. One of the most common mistakes parents make when restraining children is that they don't understand the different stages of child restraint use throughout a child's growth. Since many state laws only require child safety seat use up to age three, many parents need to learn is this: When children outgrow forward –facing convertible seats, they need to be restrained in belt-positioning booster seats – until they are big enough to fit properly in an adult seat belt. Children, who cannot sit with their backs straight against the vehicle seat back cushion, with knees bent over a vehicle's seat edge without slouching, are not big enough for adult seat belts.

Even the most safety-conscious parents are often not aware of the need for booster seats or the danger their children face when improperly restrained in an adult seat belt. On a small child, the adult lap belt rides up over the stomach and the shoulder belt cuts across the neck. In a crash, this could cause serious or even fatal injuries. The statistics are startling. Restraint use for children from birth to age one is 97 percent, and ages one to four, 91 percent. From age five to 15, restraint use plummets over 20 points to 68.7 percent. In 1998, over 47 percent of fatally injured children ages four to seven are completely unrestrained. And one National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) study showed that only 6.1 percent of booster-aged children were restrained in a booster seat.

Children generally outgrow convertible child safety seats when they are about 40 lbs. From 40 to about 80 lbs. and about 4'9" tall, children should always be seated in a belt-positioning booster; lifting them so adult lap/shoulder seat belts are "positioned" correctly and safely. Plus, booster seats offer children better visibility and comfort.

Child safety seats – including boosters – are very effective in saving children's lives during crashes.

All children age 12 and under should sit properly restrained in the back seat.

It is critical for parents not to move their children too quickly into adult seat belt systems, skipping booster seats altogether.

Parents should have their child safety seats inspected by a certified child safety seat technician.

Health Notes is compiled by the Cohasset Board of Health. National Child Passenger Safety Week is Feb. 13-19. Article reproduced from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (no permission needed)

The reason for the current problems is not the men they have cleaning, it's the lack of manpower needed to keep these buildings in the condition they should be in for our children.

Over the years, the cleaning staff has experienced decreases due to budget issues. We built a brand new school and according to previous articles I've read, there should be a custodian for every 20k square feet. The new school (approximately 75k square feet) has only had a two-man staff since its opening. If we couldn't afford to properly staff it for cleaning, why did we build it? The kids deserve an adequately cleaned atmosphere to learn in as well as educationally sound, but school administration, who have been in charge of this, neglected to give this any priority. So now because of their dropping the ball over the years on this issue, nine men (down one from last year), some of whom have been committed to the town of Cohasset for more than 20 years, stand to lose their jobs. What a great idea Mr. Haddad. You've done well by the town until now. I read that the school committee stated that jobs will be offered to them by the contracted cleaning company. Being offered a job and actually being hired are two different things. Should a loyal town servant who has been paid a union wage have to settle for a probable significant decrease in their wages because of what Mr. Haddad sees as the best solution to this issue? Where are the other town unions to help support these men with this sad situation? Cleaning these schools is not any easy job, particularly after years of lack of adequate maintenance (again, a reduction of maintenance staff) and especially when some of the men are constantly being taken away from their primary responsibilities to assist in other school matters. An already understaffed department being taken away to do other things for school personnel.

The town has recently started a maintenance department. Why not just add the proper number of people to clean and have them report to a town department. Have a foreman who can oversee and direct the cleaners as to what needs to be done and give them the resources they need to do the job. This is so important for the long term preservation of our investment. School administration should be responsible for the education of our children, not for the cleaning of our schools, and the current cleaning staff and their families should not have to suffer because of poor choices made over the years by school administrators.

Water main break

BOARD OF SELECTMEN:

I am contacting you because of the way the water department handled the recent break of the main feeder from the Bear Hill standpipe, it appears to be at great variance from the generally expected response to a public utility failure.

The situation, which I think needs to be reviewed and discussed, is:

At approximately 2 p.m. Monday, Jan. 24, a water break was reported and investigated at the high school. Responding emergency personnel and water department employees determined the source to be the main line from the standpipe, the line was isolated and shut off, taking the high school off-line and reversing the water flow for the entire system. The reserve water for the town became dependent on one small old line to Reservoir Road. After shutting the line off, the water department left for the night. During the hours that followed, attempts were made to find drawings and contact private citizen, Wayne Sawchuk; no attempt was made to repair the break until the next morning. Tuesday a private contractor and Mr. Sawchuk arrived to determine a plan of action; no water department employees were on site. Mid-morning, an apparent decision was made by the private contractor to close the project down for the day and go plowing. The project resumed Wednesday morning, again with no water department employees on site, by mid-afternoon the repair was complete, accomplished with less than 10 hours of work, but stretched over 48 hours.

Here is the problem as I see it:

The largest town building is off-line for at least 48 hours.

The largest number of employees and residents (including students) that could be inconvenienced are affected.

A public utility has failed and no 24-hour effort is made to restore it.

Management of the water department has apparently forgotten, a few years ago the town responded to their problems and requests by spending millions on system upgrades.

This situation cost the school department money, inconvenienced the public and compromised the town's public safety. The water department should make a full disclosure to the public on their handling of this emergency.

CMS students get an attitude

Project SAFEGUARD presented the first of a series of assemblies Friday, Feb. 4, to the Cohasset Middle School student body and their parents. Michael Webber outlined strategies for attitude management and stress reduction. He explained that attitude is a choice and students can have more fun, get more done and supercharge their lives if they take charge of their attitude.

Parents in attendance learned that they could use some attitude adjustment as well. It was a worthwhile hour spent on helping to enrich communication not only between parent and child, but also between peers.

The next assembly will be held Wednesday, Feb. 16, at 8 a.m. in the high school auditorium. The educational theater group, The Improbable Players, will perform a play regarding alcohol and drug addiction, recovery, and the impact use and abuse can have on relationships and future plans.

Parents are invited and encouraged to attend.

Michael Sullivan ponders run for selectman

Flynn announces school committee candidacy

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Former selectman Michael Sullivan may be throwing his hat in the ring for another run at a seat on the Board of Selectmen.

Sullivan, who decided not to seek reelection when his three-year term expired in 1998, was noncommittal when asked if he would seek another term on the board at the April 8 Town Election.

"I haven't pulled [nomination] papers," Sullivan said, "but I'm not ruling it out."

Should he become a candidate, Sullivan would become the third citizen to declare his intention to run for the seat being vacated by current selectman Diane Sullivan, who is not running for reelection. Former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins and planning board member Robert Sturdy have already obtained nomination papers to run for selectman.

While two candidates have already thrown their hats in the ring for the one available selectmen's seat, no one had stepped forward to run for either open school committee seat until this week, when former advisory committee member Richard Flynn obtained nomination papers.

Incumbents Betsy Connolly and Kathy Oftshun have both announced they will not seek reelection to the school committee.

Flynn served two terms on the advisory committee, with his second term expiring last July. He said his knowledge of fiscal matters would be valuable if he were elected to the school committee.

> "I haven't pulled [nomination] papers, but I'm not ruling it out."
> Former selectman Michael Sullivan

"Prior to having a town manager, we went through the town's budgets line item by line item," Flynn said. "I think it's important to have someone with that kind of experience on the school committee."

Flynn has also been involved with education as a founding member of the Cohasset Education Foundation [CEF], which raises funds for education outside of the school department budget. Flynn said the CEF funded the computer lab at the old Osgood school and raised $100,000 for the new language lab at the middle-high school.

When deciding whether or not to appropriate funds for renovations to Deer Hill and the middle high school, which could reach $41 million, Flynn said citizens should keep in mind the vote on building the new Osgood, when the town decided against renovating Deer Hill as part of the project.

"The trepidation in approving both projects caused us to wait on Deer Hill, and it's going to cost the town more in the long run," he said.

One part of the proposed renovation project is to get the school buildings into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act [ADA]. Flynn said residents must be aware that legal complications could ensue if the schools are not swiftly brought up to ADA guidelines.

"I'm not sure everyone understands what the ramifications are if we're not in compliance very soon," he said.

In addition to seeing a renovation project through, Flynn said one of his goals on the school committee would be to avoid quarrels with the public on contentious issues.

"I want to make the rhetoric more positive," he said. "I'd like to get back and focus on education. We've got a good educational product."

The only other candidate to obtain nomination papers this week is Lance Norris, who will run for one of the three available library trustees positions. Incumbents Agnes McCann, Carol Riley, and Patience Towle are all running for reelection to the board.

Sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil and water commissioner John McNabb will also seek reelection to their elected offices.

The following positions are available at the April 8 Town Election: Selectmen (one) for a three-year term, School Committee (two) for a three-year term, Assessors (one) for a three-year term, Board of Health (one) for a three-year term, Cohasset Housing Authority (one) for a five-year term, Planning Board (one) for a five-year term, Recreation Commission (one) for a five-year term, Sewer Commission (one) for a three-year term, and Water Commission (one) for a three-year term.

The last day to obtain nomination papers from the Town Clerk's office is Thursday, Feb. 17. Nomination papers must be returned to the Town Clerk by Tuesday, Feb. 22.

CHL appeal dismissed and reinstated

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

The town believed it had prevailed in court yet again in a case initiated by the owner of the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill. On Jan.18, 2000, a clerk in the Norfolk Superior Court dismissed CHL's appeal of a conservation commission directive ordering CHL to prevent any type of discharge into the area surrounding the landfill. The clerk dismissed the case because the court did not receive a required status report on time.

But the dismissal was a glitch, according to CHL attorney Anton Moehrke. The court's computer system initiated an automatic dismissal procedure when the status report was not filed by the deadline. Moehrke said the lawsuit has been reinstated.

The lawsuit stems from a decision by the conservation commission to place environmental restrictions on the landfill. In 1996, the conservation commission imposed an order of conditions at the landfill that included a zero discharge directive. The conservation commission imposed the zero discharge order to prevent leachate and contaminants from seeping into wetlands surrounding the landfill. The conservation commission issued the order of conditions using provisions from local and state laws that apply to materials discharged from landfills. John K. McNabb Jr., vice president of the anti-landfill group Stop Any Further Expansion (SAFE), said the usual rule of practice is to issue conditions based on local and state laws when both apply.

CHL appealed the zero discharge order to both the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP) and the Norfolk Superior Court. DEP ruled against the town, saying that the conservation commission's order was based only on state laws, which require landfills to capture only 80 percent of discharged materials. The town's bylaws mandate zero discharge. DEP issued a superceding order of conditions increasing the allowable discharge rate at CHL from zero to 20 percent.

The town appealed the superceding order of conditions. In response, DEP scheduled an adjudicative hearing. Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town is still discussing the superceding order of conditions with DEP.

The court had placed the lawsuit on hold while DEP considered the town's appeal. The court directed CHL and the town to continue negotiating while awaiting the DEP hearing and its results. When the court did not receive a status report on the negotiations, it dismissed the lawsuit. CHL successfully petitioned the court to reinstate the lawsuit.

Village station talk Mar. 14

Selectmen agreed this week to set aside 45 minutes at their Mar. 14 meeting, beginning at 8 p.m., to discuss the planning board's reasons for favoring a village site for the town's Greenbush commuter rail station.

Selectman Merle Brown wanted to have only 15 minutes for the discussion, saying "We've gone through this 100 times."

Still, other selectmen thought more time was needed to hear from interested parties on the matter.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber would like to make a presentation at the meeting in addition to that by the planning board.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the board wants an idea of what will be discussed ahead of time.

"We'd like something written beforehand from those who will make presentations," she said.

Kristin Sheerin captured first place in every event to lead the Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team over Hingham, 120-119.9. Sheerin won the all-around with a 34.0. She took then bars with an 8.4, the beam with an 8.6, the vault with an 8.4 and the floor with an 8.6. Carlie Carter took third in the overall with 31.3.

Second place send-off for Ardizzoni

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

At no time this season did anyone with gymnastics knowledge refer to the Cohasset/Norwell team as one of "destiny" unless "destiny" and fifth place in the Pilgrim Conference 2 was used together.

Bella Karolyi couldn't have foreseen C/N's tie with Randolph for second place ahead of Hanover, Hingham, Carver, in fact, was the lone team C/N was expected to beat this season. A .500 record would have been considered a huge accomplishment for the team.

Head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni was as surprised as anyone by C/N's runner-up showing behind league champion Scituate High.

"We're elated to be second," said Ardizzoni, who is stepping down as head coach after 15 years. "We ended up having a couple of breaks, but that's the name of the game. We would have been happy with fourth. Second was a dream."

C/N pulled out a thrilling 120-119.9 victory over Hingham High last Monday night, making it two wins this season over the Harbormen and clinching a share of second place.

Kristin Sheerin led a 1-2-3 sweep on the beam to clinch the decision over Hingham, which showed an inconsistency all season. Sheerin rebounded well from a fall to hit an excellent 8.6. Carlie Carter was second in 7.9 and freshman Meredith Bixby rounded out the third slot with her 7.7.

Hingham had led by 2.1 points heading into the beam, but 11 falls cost the Harbormen dearly as they self-destructed in a hurry.

Sheerin also took two firsts on the floor and vault with identical 8.4 scores, and nailed an 8.6 for first on the bars. Carter was second on the bars in 8.1.

C/N had an almost dream-like showing at last week's Pilgrim Conference 2 meet at Carver High, registering a stunning 121 points, with a truckload of strong performances.

Sophomores Sheerin and Carter were both voted to the conference all-star team in the all-around and bars, respectively. C/N's top-two gymnasts were proof that in order to be successful at the high school level, year-round work is an absolute necessity.

"Those two girls have worked so hard," said Ardizzoni who noted the lowest average score among the all-stars was an 8.175. "To be an all-star you had to be good."

The Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics team poses for a team picture after a second place finish in the Pilgrim Conference 2 season.

Carter also copped the team's sportsmanship award to go along with the three medals she earned. Sheerin took second in the all-around to Scituate stalwart Gina Verge. Bixby also garnered a medal for C/N.

"We're elated to be second. We ended up having a couple of breaks, but that's the name of the game. We would have been happy with fourth. Second was a dream."
Ruthann Ardizzoni

Sheerin bettered her own school record in the all-around with an impressive 35.05. The mark was more than two full points better than the 33.0 she averaged last winter. Sheerin recorded 8.4s on the vault and bars, and took 9.1 marks on both the floor and beam.

All proved to be significant scores. Sheerin shattered her school beam record of 8.7 and bettered Michelle Hartley's 9.0 floor standard. Her bar routine left Sheerin tied with Hartley for the school record.

Carter, whose floor routine improved from last year's 7.6 to 8.2 this winter, worked her routine to the tune of 8.15. Despite a fall off the beam, she still medaled with a 7.4, sixth-place finish. Bixby broke into the top six, grabbing fifth place with her 7.5. Carter also tied Hingham's Bronwyn Riggs on the bars as each finished with identical scores of 8.25.

Carter showed a dramatic improvement on her average of a year ago, jumping from 8.0 to 8.3.

"Once you start getting in that caliber - an 8.0 to 8.7 - there are only about five girls in the league scoring that," said Ardizzoni.

Boys hoop nipped by Hull, 66-62

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

In a hard fought, physical match, typical between the rival towns of Cohasset and Hull, the Skippers were downed in a nail-biter, 66-62. This contest was much more enjoyable to watch for Cohasset fans than the last meeting between the two, where Hull dominated 94-75.

"I told [the team] before the game to leave your hearts on the floor," said coach Ron Ford. "And they did. It was a good rivalry game."

With the score 63-60, and less than 20 seconds remaining on the clock, Cohasset had to run an inbounds play from under the basket. Since the three point shot was being heavily guarded, junior Daniel Trowers slipped into the lane and scored a lay-up to reduce the lead to one point. Once Hull got the ball inbounds, Cohasset immediately fouled to stop the clock, leaving Hull with an opportunity to shoot one and one.

"I told [the team] before the game to leave your hearts on the floor. And they did. It was a good rivalry game."
Ron Ford

All of the Skipper faithful in the crowd were screaming and banging on the bleachers so as to distract the Hull shooter. Apparently the noise got to him, as he missed the free throw, and in the ensuing mad scramble for the rebound, Hull was able to pick up the loose ball.

"We just did not make the play we needed to make," noted Ford. "I really believed that if we could have gotten that rebound, we could have come down the other end and scored to win the game."

After the second Hull player trying to convert the one and one opportunity could not handle the pressure of the insane amount of noise in Sullivan gym, Hull once again grabbed the rebound.

This time, the ball fell into the hands of Hull's most talented player, Brian Littington, who was promptly fouled and sent to the free throw line. Littington was able to block out the noise and hit both free throws to put the lead back up to three points.

"Littington is probably the best center in the league," Ford said. "He had a great game."

Despite Cohasset's poor rebounding display over the last few possessions, of the game, the Skippers did hold the overall rebounding edge, 35-27, thanks in part, to senior Khalil Madyun's 14 rebound effort.

Other high performers of the game for Cohasset were Kevin Andrews, 17 points and five rebounds, Trowers, 16 points, five rebounds and six assists, and Erik Shea, 10 points, seven rebounds, six assists and four steals.

"Kevin had probably his best offensive game of the season," said Ford. "And Erik had a very solid game for us."

As rivals, both sides hate to lose to one another, especially in their own gym. However, Cohasset can find solace in the fact that the last meeting between the two clubs produced a 19-point blowout by Hull.

Ford summed up, "I think we did a good job slowing down the tempo of the game [as opposed to last time]. We did a lot of good things against Hull. This whole season has been frustrating like that, you play hard, but can't finish."

Brighter times ahead for skaters

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset High hockey coach Dennis Walsh expected his young, very young hockey team would have a number of problems this year.

First of all, the team was just getting back to playing varsity hockey. He knew his club would suffer growing pains due to their lack of experience and maturity. He also knew that his squad would not be conditioned for the rigors of varsity hockey.

A whole new concern came up last Saturday night, when the school rescheduled a dance, the same night Cohasset was scheduled to play Norwell High.

Walsh had high hopes that his team would win its third game of the season, against Norwell, but such was not to be. Norwell won 7-4. The Clippers are 14-2 on the year.

With just two wins in 16 games it would certainly be understandable if the coach was a little discouraged.

Not coach Walsh, who looks at the brighter side of the losing season.

"We are very encouraged by the year," said Walsh. "The kids have had plenty of good competition, and it all goes to their maturing. The kids made a lot of mistakes young kids will make, but now they have some much-needed experience. A number of the kids will participate in off-season hockey leagues and work on conditioning.

"Out of the 22 kids on the team, we will lose just a couple to graduation. We also have a couple of fine looking eighth graders ready to come up, and one of them is a goalie."

The coach also added, "To go along with a lot more experienced players next year, we also have two private-school players returning to Cohasset High."

Walsh is still looking for the team to end the current season with a couple of more wins, with Trinity Catholic on the schedule for this week and South Boston High on the agenda for next Monday.

After watching the recent progress made by the newly merged Abington/East Bridgewater team, it was only natural that the coach be asked about the possibility of a merger.

Several years ago there was strong talk about merging sports with Hull High, and now, there are rumblings of a possible merger with Scituate High.

There's no question that a merger would end such talk as whether or not Cohasset should have a hockey team.

On that subject the coach stated,

Norwell freshman Amy Maree just missed out on a pair of medals, but was comforted by the fact that she set a pair of personal bests in the process. Maree took seventh on the vault in 7.5 and scored a 7.25 beam routine.

Patti LaCroix and Katie Portanova both performed well in what is growing into a highly competitive meet.

"We just had a real good meet and the girls had a lot of fun," Ardizzoni said.

The meet marked Ardizzoni's last PC2 championship as C/N's head coach. She said she "definitely" won't be back next winter and co-coach Kara Connerty will be taking over.

"Fifteen years is a long time," Ardizzoni said. "Things ran really smooth [this season] and I think that's attributed to the fact that Kara Connerty and I got along so well. She'll be fine. The longer you do it (coach) the more you learn, and you never learn everything. The sport has come so far."

Ardizzoni remembers the gymnastics program being at rock bottom when she took over the head coaching duties and it took four years to build it to some semblance of respectability.

"There were times when the team was not good at all," she said.

Ardizzoni is fully confident Connerty is primed and ready for the job. This season she showed just how committed she was to the program and Ardizzoni doesn't expect that commitment to wane.

"Kara was an incredible gymnast herself," Ardizzoni said. "Being a real high-level gymnast makes her very knowledgeable. I think she'll do very well and the kids really like her."

"Such a merger has plenty of good points. Besides giving us as varsity team, it would also enable us to have a junior varsity and freshmen team. It certainly would make a lot more kids available for the program and also cut down expenses, especially ice time."

Getting back to the current team, the coach noted, "The kids have come along very well. They made some mistakes at the beginning, but they learned from them.

"I was really expecting our kids to come out on top against Norwell, since they have played Norwell and Hanover very tough in previous games."

Softball, Little League signups

The Cohasset Youth Baseball Association (CYBA) board of directors will offer girls softball for the upcoming spring season. The aim of the program will be to provide the same level of instruction, professionalism and development while maintaining the fun atmosphere that has been the hallmark of the current CYBA programs. This will replace the independent Cohasset Girls Softball program that has been offered for the past few seasons.

In this first season, there will be two divisions grouped as age 9 to 10 and 11 to 12. Placement will be based on age as of Aug. 1.

CYBA encourages all girls wishing to participate to sign up in order to evaluate interest and to buy equipment, uniforms and schedule fields in time for opening day. For further information, call Rob Spofford at 383-1680 or Mark DeGiacomo at 383-6413.

School custodian nervous about proposed changes

Haddad said the school department currently pays $332,035 for its custodial services.

Frank Herlihy, the director of management services for the Littleton Public Schools, oversees employees of the cleaning company hired to perform custodial services in two of the town's schools. He said the school department pays $155,000 for the private firm to clean the two schools, which he said was more cost effective than keeping custodians at those schools.

"There's a big cost savings in using a cleaning company," Herlihy said. "If we hired six custodians at $20,000, which is lower than we pay our high school custodians, that's already $120,000. If you add in benefits of $4,000 apiece, now you're at $144,000. That's before you even begin talking about supplies."

Herlihy said Littleton switched to a private company at two of its schools in the early 1990s because of poor performance by custodians at those schools.

"I don't think I'd go work for a private cleaning company. I don't believe there would be as much money and I don't think the benefits would be as great."

Osgood head custodian John Danielson

"All of the custodians were told to shape up, and the custodians at those schools didn't do it," Herlihy said. "We kept our custodians at the high school because they improved their performance. We made a commitment to those individuals and we've stuck to that."

Herlihy said much of the cost savings can be attributed to supplies, which are provided by the cleaning company under its contract with the Littleton Public Schools.

Though a private cleaning company can present a cost savings, Herlihy said the process has not been entirely smooth.

"We've had good companies and we've had bad ones," he said. "We had some problems with the company before I came in, but the company I'm working with now is doing very well. It all depends on the company you get."

Haddad said he has tried to ease the concerns of school committee members who were nervous about the possibility of hiring a cleaning company which didn't work out.

"I told them if it doesn't work, just hire a different company," he said.

Danielson said a lack of manpower is the biggest problem he sees in cleaning the schools, and will have to be corrected no matter who is hired.

"These schools need to be properly staffed," he said. "You can't expect nine people to cover three schools. We're doing our job and then some."

Retiree has passion for unique sport of skate sailing

1934 sail on occasion

Hartshorne moved to Cohasset with his wife Mary, who grew up in town, after his retirement 12 years ago. He said one of the reasons he liked Cohasset was the opportunity the town provided to engage in his favorite athletic activities.

"When we'd come visit Mary's family, I used to sail at Little Harbor," he said. "I like to row as well and being able to do those things was part of the attraction of coming here."

Now that he lives in town, Hartshorne loves to go to Lily Pond and skate sail whenever he can. Because skate sailors need frozen ice and little snow, he said the conditions for the sport are rarely optimal in snow-friendly New England.

"When I went out on Monday, it was my eighth day of sailing this year," Hartshorne said of his Monday morning excursion to Lily Pond. "Eight times is really the most I can expect in any year. Usually, if it's cold enough here for the pond to freeze, there's snow on the ground."

Sitting at the kitchen table of his Border Street home and sifting through his voluminous file on skate-sailing, Hartshorne pulled out some pamphlets on the sport written in Swedish.

Hartshorne said skate-sailing is much more popular in Sweden than in the United States, thanks to its preponderance of large ponds and lakes in the Scandinavian country.

"Outside Stockholm, you can sail for 30 miles on absolutely beautiful ice," he said. "People there use 90-foot sails, which allow them to go terribly fast. They can go 60 miles an hour, easily. I've longed to go there and do that myself."

Though he enjoys sports such as skiing, sailing, and rowing, which are more solitary in nature than team sports, Hartshorne said he would love to find others in Cohasset and surrounding towns who would like to learn how to skate-sail.

"It's always been my hope to stir up enough interest to get a group of five or 10 people together to sail," he said. "Unfortunately, it's difficult because the equipment isn't readily available. Also, skate-sailing has a rather accidental nature because the conditions need to be right. If you don't stop what you're doing, which usually means working, and grab that ice, chances are you won't sail that year."

One of the joys of skate-sailing, said Hartshorne, is its low-impact nature, which can allow people to sail for hours at a time without feeling winded.

"Though not continuously, you can skate-sail for three, four, five hours at a time," he said. "By about five hours, you've probably had it, because there's a lot of stress on the legs and upper body from the tension of holding on when you're moving fast. But it's not terribly difficult. I knew a fellow who was an old Wall Street stockbroker who was skate-sailing when he was 90 years old."

Even after skate-sailing for well over half a century, Hartshorne said he is still exhilarated by the sport he learned from his father in the 1930s.

"When you're sailing along, it's just a beautiful sensation," he said. "You're going like the wind, you can really fly, but you're under control. You can make graceful turns with the sail and it's a great way to get exercise and fresh air."

Call fire force saved with $15K appropriation

The first petition requested $15,000, approximately half the department's funding, be restored to the FY 2001 budget by selectmen or an article be inserted in the warrant for the Mar. 25 annual town meeting which would allow voters to restore the funding.

The second petition called for a special town meeting to discuss restoring the funding if the conditions of the first petition were not met.

"We're fighters, and we don't give up," call firefighter Bruce Pratt told selectmen. "We'll probably file for the special town meeting tomorrow [Wednesday]."

A total of 200 certified signatures of registered voters are required to call for a special town meeting. Once the signatures are certified, the meeting must be called within 45 days.

Had selectmen not voted to restore funding for the call department, Haddad said Wednesday the issue would likely have been placed on the annual town meeting warrant.

After discussing a number of warrant articles at Tuesday's meeting, Haddad returned to the call fire department issue and made a dramatic proposal to restore $15,000 in funding for the call department.

Keeping with his preferred method of using funds from a town department to finance initiatives in that department, Haddad suggested reducing the FY 2001 overtime budget of the town fire department by $15,000 in order to fund the call force.

"In order to meet the $15,000 for the call department, I'm suggesting reducing fire department overtime from $100,000 to $85,000," Haddad said. "With the four new firefighter/paramedics, I think we'll be OK with that reduction in the overtime budget. We're taking the risk that we'll be back in the fall needing more money for overtime, but let's cross our fingers and hope it doesn't happen."

Selectman Thomas Callahan, who voted along with Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris last week to eliminate funding for the call department, agreed to make a motion to reconsider the vote. Selectmen then voted unanimously to agree to Haddad's proposal and reduce fire department overtime by $15,000 to fund the call force.

Selectman Diane Sullivan said last week's vote to eliminate funding for the department showed a lack of concern for the feelings of the call force.

"I only wish we had done this sooner, before everyone was devastated," Sullivan said.

Callahan said last week's vote was a purely financial decision and was not a referendum on the worth of call firefighters or their value to the town.

"You're sitting here painting this picture that we put everyone through all this emotional stuff, and that's unfair," he told Sullivan. "I said all along that if we could find the money somewhere in the budget, I'd be more than willing to fund the call fire department. Tonight, Mark [Haddad] found a solution in the budget. It's as simple as that."

Technology funds get nod

tration, which could be loaned out to teachers for presentations.

Haddad said the $150,000 in technology funds would be expended by the school department this fiscal year if approved by town meeting, because it was part of the department's capital plan and was simply delayed until the spring.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said some of the $150,000 may be able to be reimbursed by the state at 60 percent because of the proposed school renovation project.

"If we're successful with a town meeting vote and an override on the school project, we can roll in this $150,000 in our application to the state," DeGiacomo said. "They may not decide to reimburse all of that $150,000, but they might choose to reimburse some of it. Also, there will be technology in the renovation project in addition to this $150,000."

With the renovation project looming at Deer Hill and the middle high school, Malvey assured selectmen that funds already expended on the technology plan would not be wasted.

"What we've already put in will re reusable if the schools are renovated," he said. "The wiring and things we've put in won't be ripped out."

While the seemingly constant changes in technology will require some money each year to maintain the school department's computers and add software, Cisneros said the new computers the school system has purchased can be upgraded with a single chip.

Saint Paul's caring connection

A parish-based volunteer visitation program is being formed at St. Paul Parish in Hingham It is called the Caring Connection and was born out of an awareness of the growing number of sick and or shut-in elderly in the community who need to stay connected to their parish family. Volunteers hope to reach out to others as well who do not fit that profile, but would like to have a parish visitor. Perhaps a young mom far away from extended family, who feels isolated at home with a new baby, or a professional person who is running in the fast-paced business world and feels detached from the church, would volunteer.

Sr. Eleanor Ballantine, the Pastoral Associate at St. Paul's along with Fran Ricciarelli and Gail Ostrander are recruiting volunteers who are compassionate and faith filled. They will be speaking at all the Masses on the weekend of Feb. 13. Applications and more detailed information will be available at that time.

Orientation classes will be held on two consecutive Tuesday evenings, Feb. 29 and March 7 from 7:30 to 9 p.m. in the parish house on Fearing Road.

A minor time commitment can make a huge difference in the quality of someone's life. If you think this ministry might be for you, call us at 749-0307.

Golf Club to install underground tanks

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Is it safer to have five underground propane tanks near a residential neighborhood or to have an above-ground tank which requires more frequent refills from propane-carrying trucks driving through the neighborhood?

Selectmen were faced with the question last month as they decided to approve the Cohasset Golf Club's request for five underground, 1,000-gallon propane storage tanks.

According to town bylaws, anytime a property exceeds 2,000 gallons of propane storage, a public hearing must be held.

The club currently has an above-ground 2,000-gallon tank, which Cohasset Golf Club president Cliff Mitman said would no longer be used once the tanks are placed underground. He said a switch from oil to gas heat and an increase in cooking in the expanded kitchen created a need for extra capacity.

The underground tanks would allow for 5,000 gallons of propane storage, meaning propane deliveries would be less frequent than they currently are. Fire Department captain Mark Trask said the decrease in deliveries would improve safety for Lamberts Lane residents.

"Propane is a fairly common fuel," Trask said. "The plan has been OK'd by the fire department, and inspections of the tanks will be checked by us as well. From the fire department's point of view, delivery vehicles are a far greater danger than underground propane tanks."

Some Lamberts Lane residents were unconvinced by Trask's statements. Sallyann Quebec, 176 Lamberts Lane, lives across the street from the golf club and is worried about potential disasters which could be caused by propane explosions.

"I have serious concerns about the safety of people in our neighborhood," she said. "The amount of hydrants is woefully inadequate. I'm a concerned citizen and I'm against this."

Selectman Thomas Callahan wanted to know if the increased need for propane was part of a plan for further expansion of the golf club.

"I'm concerned with a program that leads to more expansion and development on Lamberts Lane," he said.

Attorney James F. Green, Jr., who represented the golf club in dealings with the conservation commission, said an expansion of the Golf Club would be far less obtrusive than would the development of the area into private homes.

"You're talking about the expansion of a clubhouse versus the number of new homes that would go up there," Green said. "The major concern about projects at the golf club has been the people on Lamberts Lane. You've heard from the fire department. Fewer trucks delivering fuel is safer than making more trips to fill an above-ground tank."

Selectmen approved the underground tanks by a vote of 4-1, with Callahan opposed.

To increase fire safety in the area, Callahan asked Haddad to look into the cost of improving the water supply and adding hydrants on Lamberts Lane.

Retired Craftsmen Offer Low Cost Home Repair

Marvin Belkin and Arthur Neuman at Handyman Connection

They planned to call themselves the "Gray Team," but thought that took much explanation.

Instead, they settled on "Handyman Connection" for their business venture: a group of retired craftsmen who provide low-cost home repairs. "We're not out to get rich," said Arthur Neuman, who co-owns the business with Marvin Belkin, "It's a business niche we'd like to fill."

Neuman got the idea for the business after he became chairman of his condominium maintenance committee. He found that residents could not find repairmen to do plumbing, electrical, plaster drywall, carpentry, painting, wallpapering, ceramic, etc.

After doing market research, they found that there was a definite void in the marketplace for these services and it was a niche they could fill.

Neuman grew up being "handy" and he takes care of most of the repairs while Belkin handles the business end of the venture. Belkin is a retired sales-marketing executive of Trifari Jewelry Company and a volunteer with the Service Corps of Retired Executives. Although the business was started in Cincinnati over 5 years ago, Handyman Connection has expanded to the greater South Shore and Cape areas.

In order to reduce costs to customers, Belkin said they reduced their own business expenses. They have no company trucks, no fancy uniforms, no cellular phones and no billing. Customers pay when the work is completed.

To tackle jobs in the South Shore and Cape areas, Belkin and Neuman have recruited 10 craftspeople, many of whom are multi-talented. "Some of the people have several crafts," Neuman said. "It's time saving to have one person who can plaster and paint because you don't have to call on two people to get the job done." The company relies on the talents to take care of odd jobs, such as leaky faucet, shelves, electrical switches, cutting doors down, wallpaper, plumbing and carpentry.

Although the business cuts corners to keep rates low and save the customers money, they don't cut the wrong corners: Their work is guaranteed for one year.

Land trust acquires Woodland Watershed

Title to a 5-1/4-acre parcel of woods and wetland on the west side of Route 3A in Cohasset, midway between Pond Street and Schofield Road, has been acquired by the Cohasset Conservation Trust, Inc. The property is of conservation significance as wildlife habitat and as part of the Peppermint Brook watershed to Lily Pond, Cohasset's water supply. It was a gift to the Trust by Robert C. Adams and James C. Adams Jr., brothers, who formerly lived in Cohasset and now reside in Connecticut.

The Conservation Trust will maintain the "Adams Property," as it will be called, in perpetuity as open space and wildlife habitat. The property lends itself to this use because of its extensive watercourses through dense woodland growth.

The Conservation Trust owns another property nearby, the so-called "Campbell Meadow" at the southwest corner of Pond Street and Route 3A. This 3.8-acre parcel was gifted to the Trust in 1991 by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel S. Campbell of Cohasset. Peppermint Brook runs through the meadowland parcel on its way to Lily Pond.

The Cohasset Conservation Trust, Inc. is a non-profit corporation founded in 1967 by a group of Cohasset residents to assist in conserving the natural resources, scenic beauty and historic interests of Cohasset and adjacent towns. It holds title to 15 such properties totaling more than 70 acres, including such well-known and much-used public recreational sites as a large portion of Bassing Beach in Cohasset Harbor and Great Brewster Woods near Cohasset's Town Hall. The Trust is managed by a Board of Directors, which includes Richard Avery, treasurer; Ellen Freda, John Hartshorne, president; Richard Leggat, Edward Long, Roger Porter, Debra Shadd, secretary; and Jeffrey Waal. All directors are Cohasset residents.

School building help could change

During the course of the report of his committee's progress to selectmen Tuesday night, school facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford said changes in the state's funding of school building projects could reduce the amount of funding Cohasset is slated to receive under the current system.

"It's clear the funding mechanism will change, and I believe it will negatively affect this community," Spofford said.

While no one is sure what the new formulas for state reimbursement will look like, Town Manager Mark Haddad said Cohasset is likely to receive less than 60 percent reimbursement for school building projects once the new regulations are adopted.

"We got some new information from the state discussing the Governor's proposed changes to the School Building Assistance Bureau," Haddad said. "In looking at what the proposed formula, it seems towns with higher median incomes will receive less reimbursement. That always hurts the town of Cohasset."

Spofford said Cohasset is guaranteed a spot on the 2000 list for school building projects to be reimbursed at 60 percent.

"If the project is fully funded at town meeting and approved by an override, we're certain of 60 percent," he said.

THE DESIGNING WOMAN by Kathleen Fox ASID

COUNTERTOP CABINETS

We are all very familiar with the traditional wall and floor cabinets in our kitchens that are positioned with a horizontal separation between them to accommodate a working countertop. That design is now being challenged by a recent trend that calls for at least a section of the upper cabinet to rest directly on the countertop. This configuration offers more storage that is within easy reach. In addition, the combination of hanging and base cabinets of different depths creates the appealing effect of a hutch. To make the design work, there must be sufficient usable counter space in the rest of the kitchen, as well as clear counter space to allow for opening doors and pulling out drawers.

The kitchen interior design specialists at DESIGNING WOMAN can create\ the custom kitchen you want. We'll visit your home to measure and estimate the type of kitchen that meets your needs and fits your budget. Everything from storage, to workspace, and color selection are discussed before creating the design plan. From concept to installation, you can rely on us for thoughtful attention to detail. Call us at 383-6411 to arrange a convenient consultation.

HINT: Countertop cabinets go well with the recent "unfitted" kitchen trend.

Board pushes for evaluation of CHL as Superfund site

By David Tibbetts and Mary Ford
STAFF WRITERS

The water commission says it's determined to do whatever is necessary to make sure contaminants from the Cohasset Heights Limited (CHL) landfill do not reach the Lily Pond watershed. To that end, the water commissioners have sent a letter to the federal Environmental Protection Agency asking it to determine CHL's potential for possible inclusion on the federal Superfund list of environmentally dangerous sites.

But CHL attorney Anton Moehrke questions the water commission's motivation.

"It is so unusual under these circumstances for anyone to request what they have requested," Moehrke said. "Nothing I know about in engineering justifies such a request. The Superfund list is generally used to address truly meaningful environmental problems."

Although water commission chairman John K. McNabb Jr. concedes it's very hard for a site to get on the Superfund list, he said anyone can ask EPA to place a site on the list, which is a two-step process.

The first step is to ask for a preliminary assessment, which the water commission has done with its letter. If the site meets the minimum threshold, it would then be placed on a preliminary list awaiting further determination.

Any site that meets certain criteria can be added to the Superfund list. McNabb said Norfolk Environmental, the water commission's consultant, used the EPA's evaluation software to see if CHL qualified for Superfund status. McNabb said the software examines the nature of the contaminants at the site, as well as the location's proximity to water supplies and

Little Harbor septic solution

Plan would be privately funded

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A group of residents living in the Little Harbor watershed have proposed a privately funded septic system to solve the area's wastewater management ills.

The residents group, known as the Citizens for Equitable Environmental Solutions [CEES], formed in 1997 in response to the decision designating the Little Harbor watershed a high-priority district.

The town is obligated to come up with a solution to its wastewater management problems under an agreement for judgement with the state Department of Environmental Protection [DEP].

To meet the terms of the agreement for judgement, the town designated priority districts for septic system upgrades. Residents in high priority districts were to be forced to upgrade their septic systems, a decision many felt was unfair.

"We're estimating it would cost $22,000 per household if all the homes in the district signed up."
— CEES member Nancy Herlin

"Back when the district was identified, people said 'This decision doesn't make sense,'" said CEES member Nancy Herlin. "Like a lot of areas in town, there's an awful lot of ledge, and the cost of sewer

Historical society publishes story of Hanlon brothers

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Many of the rich and famous who spent time in Cohasset during the height of the town's summer colony era in the 1800's were world travelers, but few if any saw the amazing sights witnessed by the six Hanlon brothers, who moved to town in 1888.

Born in England, the Hanlon brothers left poverty at home for a life of riches and adventure, traveling the globe with a high-flying show which included trapeze acts, tumbling, magic, and comedy.

Already world famous when they moved to Cohasset, the brothers lived in homes on Jerusalem Road and Ripley Road and built a practice studio at the corner of Smith Place and Ripley Road, where Carousel Antiques now stands.

While some records of the Hanlon brothers' lives have been gathered by the Cohasset Historical Society, the full entirety of their story had been a mystery until recently.

Martha Blair Sheppard, the granddaughter of Edward Hanlon, the second-youngest of the six brothers, had tried for years to publish the story of her famous ancestors, but her attempts were ultimately made in vain. Sheppard passed away last year, bequeathing funds in her will to the Cohasset Historical Society for the purpose of publishing the book she had written on the Hanlon brothers.

"We got these two big cardboard boxes from her lawyer," said historical society member Tom Gruber, who edited Sheppard's manuscript. She had about 400 written pages and was on a mission to record her family's history."

Using the money bequeathed to it in her will, the historical society has published 100 copies of Sheppard's book about her high-flying relatives, titled "Leap for Life". The books will sell for $22.50 and may be purchased from either the historical society or Buttonwoods Books and Toys.

Gruber said readers will be fascinated with the tale of the six brothers and their adventures performing around the world.

William Hanlon gets ready to thrill the audience with his trapeze act.

"These guys were just incredible," Gruber said. "They went all over Europe, performing for kings and queens, and went to Egypt, India, South America. Imagine doing that in the 1840s. It's amazing."

Three of the brothers' careers began in early childhood. Owing to an inability to provide for a large family, their parents entrusted the care of three of them to Professor D. John Lees, an attorney and family friend.

George, William, and Alfred Hanlon were educated by Lees, and also began to learn acrobatics after Lees noticed a unique athletic talent in the boys. According to Sheppard, the boys were only 11, 7, and 4, respectively, when, as the Hanlon-Lees, they debuted their

Underage smoking ban bylaw debated

Would make it illegal for minors to use tobacco

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

If a proposed bylaw passes at the Mar. 25 town meeting, it will be illegal in Cohasset for those under 18 to smoke cigarettes or use tobacco in any of its forms.

Under Massachusetts law, it is illegal for minors to buy cigarettes or tobacco, but no provision exists prohibiting the use of tobacco by those under 18.

The citizens' petition article includes penalties for minors caught smoking or using tobacco. Under the article, fines may be assessed of $50 for the first offense, $100 for the second offense, and $200 for any third or subsequent offense. The same fines would apply to minors caught buying cigarettes or tobacco.

"We ran this by the Attorney General's office and they said this article would be legal if passed by the citizens of Cohasset at town meeting."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Money collected from the fines would be put into the town's general fund, according to bylaw proponent Leonora Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Road. Parents or guardians of minors violating the bylaw would be liable for payment of the fines.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said conversations with the state have assured him such a bylaw is legal in Massachusetts.

"We ran this by the Attorney General's office and they said this article would be legal if passed by the citizens of Cohasset at town meeting," Haddad said.

Jenkins spoke in favor of the article at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting. She said aggressive steps should be taken to prevent minors from smoking.

"Studies have shown that teenage smoking can lead to the use of other drugs," Jenkins said. "Obviously, smoking poses a danger to the School facilities to meet Saturday

The school facilities committee will hold a special Saturday morning meeting at 9 a.m. in the high school library to discuss renovation plans proposed by architects Strekalovsky and Hoit.

The architects were to present renovation plans for Deer Hill and Cohasset Middle High School after the Mariner went to press Wednesday night.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the architects have been soliciting comments from principals and teachers about possible renovation options and will take those into account in developing plans.

The Saturday morning meeting is open to the public and will also be broadcast on cable channel 22.

Tax bill check-offs

At their Tuesday meeting, selectmen unanimously recommended a warrant article for the Mar. 25 special town meeting which will establish three town funds which residents can contribute to via check-offs on their tax bills.

The article creates a Town Scholarship and Local Education Fund as well as an Elderly and Disabled Taxation Fund.

Two committees will be formed to determine how to distribute revenues generated in the funds. Town treasurer/collector Joseph DiVito said the committees may not be formed for a couple of years, however.

"We need to build up the base for a little while before we talk about how to distribute the money," he said.

DiVito said the Town Scholarship Fund would only be used to assist students in paying for education past high school, while the Local Education Fund would go toward paying for items outside the school budget. The Elderly and Disabled Taxation Fund would assist low-income and disabled senior citizens having difficulties meeting their tax liability but may not apply for certain exemptions.

"This will help us augment the exemption program already in place," DiVito said. "This is down the road a bit, but individuals would fill out applications, there would be some sort of means test, and the committee would distribute the funds."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the funds will give citizens who want to contribute to the town more ways in which to do so.

"I think this article gives us extra options," he said.

Citizen article not recommended

Selectmen voted unanimously not to recommended a citizen petition article which would allow an $800,000 capital exclusion override for the purpose of doing renovations at Deer Hill and the middle high school.

Proponent Leland Jenkins, 198 Jerusalem Rd., said he wants to ensure a back-up option exists if the school renovation project is voted down at the Mar. 25 town meeting or April 8 override election.

"I'm concerned renovations won't be done for some time if the $41 million article doesn't pass," Jenkins said.

The capital exclusion override would be a one-time increase in the tax rate.

Selectman Merle Brown wanted to know what the town would do with the $800,000 should the article be approved at town meeting.

"With $800,000, you have to set priorities," he told Jenkins. "What exactly is going to be fixed? I'm not going to vote for $800,000 if I don't know what we're going to get."

Jenkins said repairs need to be made over time. He suggested the $800,000 could be used to fix the boilers at the middle-high school, among other repairs.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said the article doesn't need to be on the warrant because it is essentially a crutch to fall back on in case the school article doesn't pass.

"What you're proposing should really be done in the fall," McMorris said. "Are we putting in a fail-safe method or an alternative? This is something we could call a special town meeting to take care of if we need to."

School facilities committee chairman Rob Spofford said $800,000 is simply not enough to solve the infrastructure problems at Deer Hill and the middle high school.

"We have serious life safety issues and code violations which need to be addressed, and $800,000 doesn't even start that process," Spofford said. "[Compliance with] ADA is $1.3 million alone."

McMorris said a lower cost in the short-term would cost taxpayers more in the coming years.

"If your concern is saving money and doing repairs, you can't do it for $800,000," she said. "You're proposing a Band-Aid when we need a heart transplant."

Residential brush

Residential brush will be accepted at the D.P.W. parking area until further notice. No trees larger than 12" in diameter. No contractors.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

PADDING ABOUT THE CARPET

The cost of padding should be included in the price of wall-to-wall carpeting, along with the cost of installation. The function of a pad is to provide softness and comfort underfoot, as well as to prolong the life of the carpet. Carpet padding also enhances the acoustic and insulation benefits of carpeting. It is important, therefore, to give careful consideration to the selection of padding. Contrary to popular belief, the thickest pad is not always the best For instance, a pad that provides too much cushioning may actually increase the rate of carpet wear and cause ripples and stretching in the carpet. Density is a more important factor in carpet padding than thickness.

Selecting just the right carpet for your home involves a lot more than simply finding a color or style that you like. THE DESIGNING WOMAN can take the mystery out of the carpet selection process by reviewing traffic patterns in the room and the appropriate padding and strain resistance required. We offer complete interior design service and can help you coordinate al elements of a room including the flooring, wallpaper, furniture and accessories. HINT: The U.S. Dept. of Commerce decreed that as of Jan. 1, 2000 all carpeting must be sold by the sq. ft. instead of the sq. yd. To obtain the sq. ft. price, the sq. yd. price is divided by nine.

Politics influence bond bill vote, officials say

Panel cuts Greenbush language

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

State Sen. Robert Hedlund gives Hingham residents his latest take on Greenbush during a train forum in Hingham last week.

Like so many issues surrounding Greenbush, the true meaning behind the state senate ways and means committee's decision to cut the appropriation for Greenbush from the $5 billion transportation bond bill is open for debate.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who opposes restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad, thinks Tuesday's decision to cut that $225 million authorization for MBTA rail projects is significant.

"It's a major symbolic move," said Hedlund. "Outside myself, Mary Jeanette and a few others, no leadership has questioned Greenbush from a financial standpoint until now." State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset, who is in her 12th term, also opposes Greenbush.

But state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, an ardent Greenbush supporter, says removing Greenbush language from the bill is politically motivated and is not a big deal.

"I don't see the failure of the senate to include Greenbush as any kind of a setback," he said. "The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee (Sen. Mark C. Montigny, D-New Bedford) sent a message that he wants the New Bedford/Fall River line built and wants it to be as great a priority as Greenbush."

The transportation bond bill — divided into two parts one for the MBTA and the other for large capital projects like roads, highways and bridges — provides the spending authority for anything that has to be bonded, Hedlund explained.

On Tuesday, the ways and means committee cut the Greenbush language out of the line item that also included wording for New Bedford and Fall River, which remained. (The house or senate refers all bills having to do with state finances to its committee on ways and means).

> "It's a major symbolic move."
> — State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund

The next step for the bill is the conference committee. (When both houses pass differing versions of the same bill, a conference committee made up of members of both houses is appointed to reconcile the differences. Then the bill will be voted by each chamber before going to the governor's desk).

Hedlund, who agrees that politics played a role in cutting Greenbush language, will serve as one of the three senators on the committee working out the differences with the house. On the other side of the table will be Rep. Joseph Sullivan, D-Braintree, house chairman of the transportation committee, who is pro-Greenbush.

"In conference committee, that kind of political statement (by Montigny) will be ironed out," said Hynes.

Both Hynes and Hedlund agree that the issue of including Greenbush in the bond bill may be moot in just a matter of months.

Starting July 31, the MBTA will be required to manage its budget like any other private entity of agency, Hynes said. The MBTA will have to pay for its debt service out of its own revenues.

"As of July 31, they will have the ability to go out (to borrow) on their own, but will have to pay for the debt service themselves," Hedlund explained.

That means the MBTA can borrow for projects without asking the legislature.

Murder charge shocks CHS

Graduate suspect in shooting

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Coach Ron Ford has faced losing seasons, but nothing's been as difficult as learning that a former player is a suspect in a shooting.

Frederick Howard, Jr., a 1996 Cohasset High graduate, is wanted in connection with the Feb. 6 fatal shooting of a 33-year-old Cambridge man, according to the Middlesex District Attorney's office.

"Here's a kid that at one point in life showed he could get it together and do really well," Ford said. "I think he got involved with the wrong people."

Howard, who remains at large, is a 22-year-old black male and is described as about 160 pounds and 5-feet, 8-inches tall. He has brown hair, brown eyes and a slight mustache and beard, police said.

Cohasset police have posted a flyer from the Cambridge Police Department with Howard's photo and description on the glass window in the foyer at the station.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said police think Howard may try to come to Cohasset where he has friends and former classmates.

Howard was a METCO student and as a point guard, helped the team go all the way to the Fleet Center.

Ford said Howard made the varsity team his senior year.

"He made the most of his chance and had a great year and stayed out of trouble," Ford said.

Howard played in the CHS alumni game over Christmas vacation.

"Freddie seems good, he was working," Ford recalled. "It's upsetting to everybody but, at this point, I'm scared for him and hope he turns himself in."

After graduating from Cohasset High, Howard briefly attended Eastern Nazarene College.

Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo said Howard was a popular student who did not cause much trouble at CHS.

"He got in with the wrong crowd and made some bad decisions the last couple of years," DeLorenzo said.

Yvonne Jones, METCO director said she is still in shock.

"I couldn't believe this was the Fred that I knew. It is just devastating," she said. Although Jones has not seen Howard since he graduated she remembers him well.

"He was a great kid, a kidder," she recalled. "Anytime you saw him, he always had a smile. He had a great personality."

Authorities believe that Howard shot Williams during an argument at about 12:30 a.m. Feb. 6 and then fled. His last known address is 171 Columbia St. in Cambridge.

Police said Howard should be considered armed and dangerous. Anyone with information about his whereabouts should call the Cohasset police at 383-1055 or the Cambridge Police Department, Criminal Investigation Division at 617-349-3370.

AROUND TOWN

A HAPPY NOTE

We can start on a very happy note this week. Judy Perry is a grandmother! Her daughter Marisol Barzey and husband Keith presented her with a brand new granddaughter Jan. 28! Her name is Judith Audrey Barzey (named after both grandmothers) and from all accounts she is precious! Of course, Judith's paternal grandparents are thrilled beyond belief, as is her great-grandfather, Dr. Tom Perry from Kingston!

We send our love to you all and we know you must have had a super Valentine's day!

BELATED BIRTHDAY

Happy belated birthday greetings go to Jack DeLorenzo — we have heard that he had a wonderful party with fellow co-workers, then, you know that his wife, Pam, cooked him his favorite dish for the event! Hope your day was a happy one, Jack, and here's to may more!

ON UNIVERSITY PANEL

Cohasset resident William Hannon has been appointed chair of the Design Management Advisory Panel of the University of Westminster's (London) Harrow Business School. The Harrow Business School offers a "distance learning" MBA in Design Management and recently accepted its second U.S. cohort.

Hannon is professor of industrial design at the Massachusetts College of Art and is principal of Hannon Design, a consultancy. He is a Life Fellow of the Design Management Institute and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts.

DEAN'S LIST

We congratulate Jared Ford, a 1999 Cohasset High graduate!

A feat indeed, he made the dean's list at Roger Williams University, his very first college semester! Congratulations, Jared, everyone is proud of you!

FACULTY HONORS

Speaking of pride, how about John Whitehouse, a 1996 CHS grad, who earned Faculty Honors last semester at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn.? A student can't receive a grade under A- to qualify!

John is a senior biology major with a 3.8 average, and you had better believe that he is making his parents very happy and proud, as are we all!

GREAT JOB

We also give a round of applause to Nathan George Caldwell, he made the dean's list at Plymouth State College for the fall semester — did a great job, Nathan; we send our congrats to you and hope that you keep up your good work!

SPORTS DAY

Eileen Ridge of Cohasset High fame participated in the Massachusetts celebration of National Girls and Women in Sport Day at Faneuil Hall in Boston Feb. 4 — Maura Duffy joined her in accepting honors! Both girls (athletes) were chosen because they are positive contributing members of both their teams and their school.

Both Maura and Eileen are members of the soccer and track team at CHS, and to say that we are proud of them is an understatement — it's that and much more! Congratulations go to you both, we are thrilled for you!

COLLEGE HONORS

We extend our congratulations to Chloe J. Chittick, she was named to the Colby College dean's list for outstanding academic achievement during the fall semester of the 1999-2000 school year! Chloe is the daughter of Stanley and JoAnne Chittick and majors in anthropology and religious studies.

Another Cohasset High School graduate to be ever so proud of!

GOLFER'S DREAM

We hear great news about a Cohasset golfer (via his friend, that Barney McKeough made a hole-in-one in Florida! He was at Heather Hills Country Club, and he did it!

Every golfer's dream, congratulations (P.S. for all of you avid golfers, he used a 3 wood).

TAKING HOME THE GOLD

Matt Taber, Tristam Norman, Robbie Brady and Ryan McLellan proved to be the fastest sled racers at the recent Scout Klondike Derby held in Myles Standish State Forest. More than 1,000 area scouts and leaders participated in the event, making it one of the largest in the country. The Klondike Derby pits teams from all over the South Shore in a competition that tests outdoor skills such as fire building, knot tying, first aid, tent setup, cooking, and knowledge of forestry. The Cohasset fifth-grade team was awarded the gold medal by Mike McDonald, Old Colony Council District executive, capping off the fun-filled day.

NEW ARRIVAL

Sally Rossi and Doug Ormon are proud to announce the birth of their son Paul Michael Rossi-Ormon, who was born Jan. 19 at 7:44 p.m. Paul weighed in at 9 lbs. 11 oz. and his length was 23 inches!

You can bet that his sister, Erika Langer, will take great care of Paul and adore him! As will his grandparents, Mike and Peg Rossi and Ralph and Holly Ormon!

We wish you all the best, and love that baby boy!

Welcome, Paul!

IT'S HAPPENING

Consignment shop sale ends Feb. 27

If your New Year resolutions included saving money and volunteering for good causes then plan to come to the famous annual sale of the Social Service League's Cohasset Consignment Shop. The shop is located at Tedeschi Plaza, Route 3A. Regular hours for shopping are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.. to 4 p.m., and Sunday noon to 4 p.m.

Manager Andi Merrill of Scituate said many treasures will be offered for men, women, children and infants at half price and up to 80 percent off. Merrill added the sale will include selected fur coats, leather jackets including some fur lined, silver and gold jewelry, cashmere sweaters, Italian and English china, winter coats, slacks and blouses.

The sale ends Sunday, Feb. 27, and consigning for spring and summer will commence Monday, Feb. 28, 10 to 11:30 a.m., Monday through Friday, Merrill said.

Profits from the Cohasset Consignment Shop support the myriad of services the Social Service League provides for the towns of Norwell, Hull, Hingham, Scituate and Cohasset. Volunteers are needed; call 383-0687 for further information.

Author reading

Cambridge author Maneve Medwed will read and sign copies of her new book, "Host Family," Wednesday, March 1, from 7-9 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

In the many short stories she's written for such magazines as Redbook, Playgirl and The Missouri Review, and in her debut novel, "Mail," Medwed has offered a witty, fine-tuned and poignant take on modern life and romance. In her latest novel, "Host Family," she outdoes herself with a hysterically original story about the fragility of relationships, the quest for stability and the parasite we call love, through the Lewises, for two decades the most gracious host family to international college students in all of Cambridge.

Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve a place.

Dinner, anyone?

Dinner, anyone? The Beechwood Church, 51 Church St., invites you to dinner. "Alpha" dinners will be held on Wednesday evenings from 6 to 9 p.m. through April.

Cell phone antennas

A bill moving quickly through the Legislature would strip local control and significant review of cell phone antennas under the guise of making a "more efficient and uniform process" for approving placement of these wireless communication structures.

The Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA), a group that is supposed to represent the interests of communities in the Bay State, bought into a proposal by the wireless communications industry that would eliminate local zoning requirements for microwave (cellular telephone) antennas, as long as they are erected on an existing building or structure and don't exceed 10 feet in height. In other words, this legislation, if approved, would leave it up to a town building inspector to review and approve an application to erect a cell phone antenna on just about any structure, including town-owned towers, water towers or buildings already standing in residential neighborhoods.

The MMA and wireless telecom providers came up with this proposal "designed to protect local decision-making in the siting of wireless facilities while avoiding a contentious and too often litigious process," according to a story in the association's newsletter "The Beacon." The MMA intended to eliminate oversight by the state Department of Telecommunications and Energy, which currently has the power to overturn local antenna siting decisions.

Unfortunately, while the MMA might believe this proposal before the Legislature will speed the approval process for these limited-height antennas, the same proposal negates virtually all local control and public hearing mandates set forth by local zoning bylaws. Under the plan, a telecommunications company would apply for a building permit — a process that does not mandate any public hearing, public notification or review process — and would be granted the permit by a building inspector and "any other board appointed by the municipality," according to the MMA newsletter. The problem is that the proposal throws out any strong oversight by a local zoning board, allows the telecommunications company to bypass all local laws and public review, except what a building inspector might try to bring into the process.

The proposal virtually guarantees a speedy proliferation of cellular antennas sprouting on the rooftops of commercial buildings, municipal properties (which, theoretically, could include schools, town offices, police and fire departments and anywhere else a telecommunications company can convince a city or town an antenna is needed for good cell phone reception), and in residential neighborhoods where pumping station buildings, electrical switching structures, water towers and broadcast towers now stand on town-owned land.

This proposal comes under the guise that the current rules too often lead to expensive and prolonged court battles between towns trying to limit the siting of cell phone towers, and telecommunications companies fighting to site towers under the broad guidelines of the Federal Telecommunications Act of 1996.

Under that act, towns have limited power to control the siting of telecom facilities, but the municipalities do have some control short of barring wireless telecommunications facilities altogether. Since 1996, many cities and towns in the state have adopted regulations to keep local control of the telecommunications industry's facilities, while still falling within the mandates of the federal law. These bylaws allow reasonable access to communities by the telecom providers, while retaining the community's right to notice and a fair hearing on the merits of an application before a local board makes a decision, taking local conditions and needs into account. Those decisions can be challenged in Massachusetts superior and federal courts if a company takes issue with a town's decision. The new proposal by the MMA and the telecommunications companies would eliminate all those steps, under the pretense of saving the municipalities and companies all that aggravation and potential legal expense.

If this bill passes, it is possible we will see a proliferation of wireless microwave antennas on rooftops throughout Massachusetts. Other than the review by a building inspector and the person or board designated by a community, a telecommunication company's application would face no hurdles and raise little attention from the public until it was too late to react.

This legislation, which is not scheduled for any public hearing on Beacon Hill, would strip local control over every community's resources and right to use strong zoning laws — and the accompanying formal public review process — to decide on whether a telecommunications facility is right and appropriate in a community.

We urge residents to speak out against this proposal and to contact their legislators to register opposition.

School custodians

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset's School Committee, dissatisfied with performance of school custodians, and concerned with costs, has decided to get proposals from outside cleaning firms. This situation is similar to one in a company where, as VP Human Resources, I was involved. In my company, the outside cleaning service alternative turned out to be not as favorable as we thought it would be. After two different cleaning firms, we ended up going back to our own in-house custodial force. Based on this experience, I'd urge the School Committee to proceed with caution.

In my company, the bids that came in from four cleaning firms averaged 25 percent less than our own cost for salaries and benefits. That was where the savings were, they paid their employees less.

Performance of the first cleaning firm was satisfactory for the first several months, but then started to slip. At the end of the first year, performance was terrible, and so my company went through the bidding process again, and selected a second cleaning company. We then witnessed a repeat of slipping performance. This prompted us to back to our own in-house custodians.

Without going into complete detail, here are some conclusions:

- The slipping performance was due primarily to high turnover. Almost every week, there would be at least one new employee. The cleaning company's low wage schedule and poor benefit levels could not attract or keep superior employees.
- We couldn't ask the cleaning service employees to do non-cleaning tasks outside the contract specs, such as shoveling snow or making small repairs. Special cleaning requests were either ignored or resulted in an extra charge.
- Theft of both company property and employees' personal property became a gnawing and unsolvable occasional issue.

Finally, we concluded that our earlier dissatisfaction with our in-house custodians was due to (1) our own failure to properly direct the custodians, and (2) our own inaction on two misfits who should have been let go or transferred. Later, we faced up to this.

The cost issue was an illusion because we were asking our own custodians to do tasks that the outside cleaners were not required to do.

From this experience, I'd suggest that more attentive supervision may solve the problem.

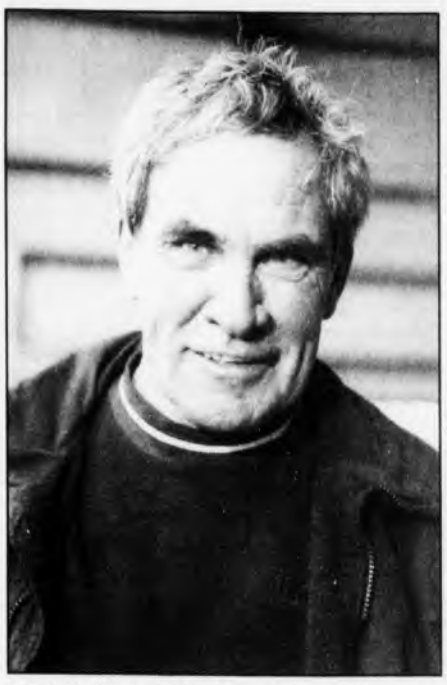
What do you think about Pay-as-you-Throw?



"I don't like it. I think it would be a real pain and with the amount of taxes we pay here, getting rid of trash should be free."

— Ed Figueiredo, 54 Cedar St.

"I don't know that it really impacts our family. We recycle a lot as it is. I'd like to know how they'd count the bags because when you have kids, you have a lot of garbage."

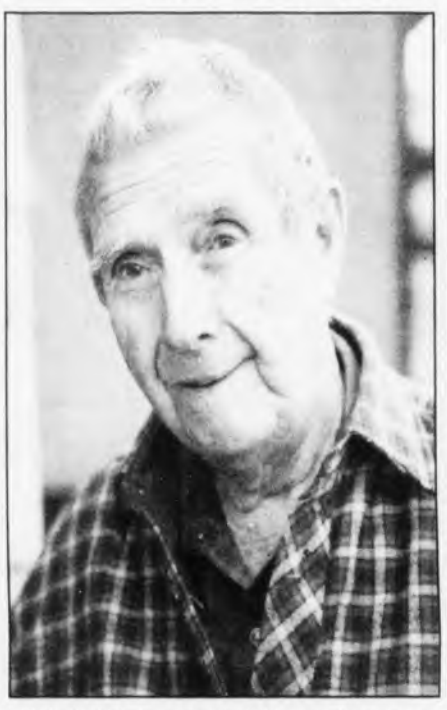
—Carrie Brown, 40 Fair Oaks Lane

"I'm from Scituate, where we have the program, and it seems to me that people are throwing less trash away. This is what it's coming to now, because people can throw away whatever they want in the dark bags."

—Tom O'Brien, Cohasset DPW employee

"I'm not excited about it, but I would like to see more recycling. It seems like another cost for older people. I only have one little bag a week. I'd like to see how it's working in other towns, though."

— State Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray



"I don't think I care for it. I'd have to hang on to a bag until it's full. I usually just throw away one or two small bags at a time."

— Danny Blair, 348 N. Main St.

"I think it's a good idea to get people to recycle more, but I'd need to see how they're going to distribute the bags and what the costs would be. I can't imagine paying any more in taxes for trash disposal. Also, I'd like to see the town give us recycling bins. Make it easy on us to recycle."

—Vicki Neaves, 259 N. Main St., with son Charlie

Voters at the annual town meeting on March 25 will be asked to consider the Pay as you Throw program.

Support school renovation project

LOCAL VIEW

TOM CALLAHAN

The school renovation project to be proposed by the School Facilities Committee at Town Meeting deserves to be supported. We have to do something. Inaction is not an option.

The need for substantial infrastructure and systems replacements and upgrades at the two schools is apparent, a point everyone seems to accept. The debate that exists centers on how much work we need or should do, and the cost of the various options. I share everyone's concern about taxes. Anyone following town politics knows I have spoken strongly for restraint and discipline in the budget while we are carrying a heavy, but necessary and largely unavoidable, debt load. But I do not advocate avoiding all new debt at all cost. The town's fiscal health is not measured simply by our tax bills of the moment. It is instead the result of a complex equation that includes taxes, value of capital assets, property values (which are very much impacted by the state of schools) and good management practices. Maintaining, preserving and extending the life of our capital assets is very important to our long-term fiscal position. While desiring to keep taxes reasonable, we also must accept that there are things we cannot change (such as the need to replace capital items like buildings from time to time) and things that impact local taxes over which we have no control (like the state's criteria for what makes an acceptable building for education today). These perhaps unpleasant but certainly unavoidable realities should not cause us to bury our heads in the sand, but instead should cause us to look for the alternative that gives us the biggest bang for the buck we must unavoidably spend.

The school buildings need this work due to a combination of factors: a) poor capital asset management in the past (failing to maintain, failing to do gradual repairs); b) simple age (each building is 40-plus years old and many systems have just gone beyond useful life, and c) law-driven changes: ADA, for one, and current educational thinking and policies that, love 'em or hate 'em, dictate whether we can achieve the prize — the 60 percent state money — for repairs we have to undertake anyway. The unfortunate result of this combination is a very large expenditure of money needed sooner or later. Putting this project off does not make it go away, however, it will just make it costlier.

I would submit that our response to this combination of factors should be the following. As to past mistakes, if there were some, recognize what we did or didn't do, don't repeat those mistakes, bite the bullet, fix the last, big manifestation of those mistakes (the condition of these schools) and then move on into a new era of responsible and committed capital asset management and maintenance — and do it with a 60 percent state reimbursement. Looking forward, accept that the ADA and other new legal and educational realities exist, and are ultimately good things. Plan for the long term. Realize that given the age of the buildings, we are at a juncture where, in exercising both sound capital asset management and sound educational planning, we should decide how we are to house our school program for the next 50 years, not just the next 10. The choice is to let the buildings stay as they are, facing costlier replacement later, or do a patch job to buy more time, at our own expense, or modernize and upgrade for the long term with a substantial state contribution.

I share everyone's concern about taxes. Anyone following town politics knows I have spoken strongly for restraint and discipline in the budget while we are carrying a heavy, but necessary and largely unavoidable, debt load.

To be sure, not only renovations, but some added classroom space is part of this project. We do have a current increase in population in certain grades that must be addressed. We should do what we can to allow for future growth. Some will criticize the smaller class sizes of today or the reconfiguration proposal as driving up costs unnecessarily. I disagree. Even if one is skeptical about the current educational thinking as compared to that of 30-50 years ago, the reality is that the educational policies of today are the cards we have been dealt. To lower our bottom line cost, we must focus on what gets us the state reimbursement, if it, in fact, will yield us the best result on a cost/benefit basis. The reality also is that the convoluted system of getting state money results in us being able to do more work at less cost to our local taxes than would a renovation-only project, or a piecemeal project funded by yearly capital exclusion overrides. Thus, indulging the theories of the moment does not hurt us as taxpayers and need not cloud the issue.

In the end, the only question is the best way to pay for the best project. The choices are simple:

A. Renovations only, with no expansions to meet educational program or population increase needs — $19 million, no state reimbursement, all on our taxes, over 20 years, no guarantee of getting 50 year life out of the buildings.

B. The Proposal at Town Meeting — renovations plus program — and population-driven expansions, providing as best as anyone can predict a 50 year life — $41 million, less 60 percent = $16 million on our taxes, over 20 years. (I look at it as two essentially new schools for $16 million)

C. Vote no. Avoid the issue. Then start saving those pennies for the costlier project of the near future.

$19 million? vs.

$16 million (a $16 million that buys us so much more than the $19 mil.)? vs.

Do nothing and pay even more later?

I believe the choice is obvious.

Also be very aware that the 60 percent reimbursement figure will likely not be around if we wait even a year. The state is apparently set on changing the reimbursement formula, and preliminary figures from the proposal shows "rich" Cohasset getting a lesser percentage in the future. If we get in at 60 percent now, we're told we're locked in.

A name by any other name

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see there's a move afoot among the politically correct to change the name of the town of Amherst because of the nasty things its namesake Gen. Jeffrey Amherst did to the Native Americans.

Amherst, who led the colonial forces in the French and Indian War, is said to have introduced small pox-infected blankets as a population control method among the natives, who were then known as "them (choice of expletives) Indians."

Next thing you know, Howie Carr and Don Feder and their friends will want to change the name of the town of Clinton even though it's named for DeWitt Clinton, who dug the Erie Canal, and not the current occupant of the White House.

Actually it's not unusual for towns or cities to change their names in the interest of political expedience. The Russians have been doing it every time the government changes hands.

One of the great battles of World War II took place at a city called Stalingrad. But don't look for it on a map of Russia today. It quietly became Volgograd when the great dictator died and became a non-person.

Before it was Stalingrad it was Tsaritsyn and you know what happened to the tsar when the commissars took over in the corner office.

Actually it's not unusual for towns or cities to change their names in the interest of political expedience. The Russians have been doing it every time the government changes hands.

Likewise, once the yoke of communism was removed, Leningrad St. Petersburg, by which it had been known for years until the revolution turned Russia into the Soviet Union.

Saigon, once the capital of South Vietnam, became Ho Chi Minh City once the last helicopter lifted off the roof of the American embassy.

The town in Ontario where the hockey players Milt Schmidt and Porky Dumart were born was Berlin until Germany became the enemy in World War I when it devolved into Kitchener, named after the British general.

The latest town in Massachusetts to undergo a name change was the town on Martha's Vineyard which acknowledges its Indian majority by becoming the town of Aquinnah.

But the communities of Norwell, Whitman and Brockton can thank their former residents that they are not faced with the same choice as the people of Amherst.

When the residents of South Scituate seceded from Scituate they were given the option of renaming their town. The choice of Standish, Deane, Cushing or Norwell was presented to them. They voted for Norwell.

When the people of South Abington departed from Abington they were given the opportunity to pick a new name from a list of Standish, Brainard, Grandon or Whitman. They selected Whitman.

Who knows what would happen if either town had chosen Standish after what Capt. Miles did to the Indians that time in Weymouth?

Likewise, when the town of North Bridgewater sought a new name someone actually filed a bill in the legislature to rename the town Standish. But for some reason the vote was rescinded.

Four years later, they requested a change to Brockton and it was done.

The name was suggested by a resident who heard it announced by a conductor on a train to Detroit and liked it.

The name that was announced was actually Brockville, Ont., named for Sir Isaac Brock, who died fighting against the United States in the War of 1812, possibly the only time an American town was named for an enemy soldier.

You can't get more politically correct than that.

LIBRARY CORNER

Online research database

Students doing reports should check out the SIRS databases now available at the library and on the library's web site (www.cohassetlibrary.org). SIRS stands for Social Issues Research Sources. Originally it was a multi-volume collection of articles compiled for the convenience of students. Now in electronic format, it is an interactive reference tool designed to strengthen the research, reading, writing and computer skills.

SIRS is divided into two sections: the Discoverer is for younger students. It includes articles and pictures selected from more than 1,100 newspapers, magazines and government documents. The articles are chosen for their educational content, interest and level of readability. Discoverer also provides biographies of every U.S. president, information on more than 100 countries, an encyclopedia containing 26,000 entries that cover science, people, ideas and history, and the World Almanac for Kids.

The Researcher is for older students. It contains thousands of full-text articles exploring social, scientific, health, business, political and global issues. It also includes 300 detailed, colorful maps of the world and excerpts from the World Almanac and Book of Facts. Also included are: directories of federal agencies and members of Congress, and a selection of historic documents and Supreme Court decisions.

Both sections of the SIRS database show students the proper way to cite electronic sources in their bibliographies.

For home access to the SIRS databases, users will have to type in the barcode from their Paul Pratt Memorial Library when prompted for an ID. This service is funded by the Southeastern Mass. Library System.

Investment service

"Value Line Investment Survey Expanded Edition" is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This service reports on 1,800 additional stocks, beyond the 1,700 stocks covered in the basic Value Line Investment Survey, also available at the library. These two services publish each week, giving summaries, ratings and various "screens" on a group of stocks. These two services are paid for by the Mercie Vinal Nichols Fund, a library trust fund.

Selectmen add article for police and fire station study

Amount estimated between $10K and $15K

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

First it was the town library, followed by the schools. Now two more town departments need additional space.

That's the message from the police and fire station study committee, which came to Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting asking for an article to be placed on the Mar. 25 town meeting warrant to conduct a study of the police and fire station on Elm Street.

Because warrant articles were due last month, selectmen had to approve the inclusion of the article on the town meeting warrant.

Selectmen unanimously recommended the article be included after hearing the recommendations of the five week-old police and fire station study committee.

The cost of the study is not yet known, but committee chairman George McGoldrick said he believes it will cost between $10,000 and $15,000.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he is working on drafting an RFP [Request for Proposals] for the feasibility study to pin down the exact dollar amount before town meeting.

Since the article was only added to the warrant Tuesday night, Haddad said he and town accountant Michael Buckley would study ways to fund the proposal in the current fiscal year.

McGoldrick said the police and fire station committee's investigation of the current buildings showed the departments need room to expand.

"In looking at the existing facilities, it became apparent the buildings don't meet the needs of the police and fire departments," McGoldrick told selectmen. "There's no room for storage, roll call, and no room for expansion. Officers are working in broom closets. We need to look at space enlargements."

McGoldrick said the committee has visited the new Hingham police station and the old Osgood school in an effort to look at possible ways to find space for the departments. He said the committee has also met with the library trustees, who hope to have a new library built at the old Osgood school, about ways to share the building.

"There can be a completely separate building structurally and mechanically at the rear of the old Osgood which could serve as a new home for one of the departments," McGoldrick said.

In addition to the old Osgood school, McGoldrick listed the current Pratt library, the West field behind the old Osgood, and Route 3A as possible spots to place a new police or fire station.

Selectman Tom Callahan said lowering response time should be a primary objective when discussing a possible move of the fire station.

"It seems to me response time is most important in the fire department," Callahan said. "Is the fire department ideally located now?"

Fire chief Roger Lincoln said the town would need at least two fire stations to appreciably lower the department's response times.

"The fire department could be better located closer to town, maybe in the gravel pit area behind the Little League field," Lincoln said. "But to make a real difference in response time, we'd need stations at opposite ends of the town."

Improving response time will be one of the areas examined in the feasibility study, which will look at the requirements for both departments and suggest options for expansion.

Town Manager Mark Haddad was complimentary of the police and fire station study committee for coming forth with the proposal after only five weeks. He said a feasibility study is a logical next step in trying to find an answer to the space dilemma faced by the police and fire departments.

"I think this article will help the committee move forward," Haddad said. "It's time to get professional help to work closely with the committee."

Evaluation of CHL as Superfund site

population centers. Sites that score at least a 28.5 on EPA's analysis test may be eligible for Superfund status. McNabb said Norfolk Environmental's analysis of CHL indicated that it scored a 30 on EPA's analysis test.

"The analysis showed that the greatest threat from the landfill is from surface water migration to Lily Pond, the source of Cohasset's public drinking water supply, which is located one mile downstream from CHL," the water commissioners wrote in a letter to EPA.

EPA spokesman Nancy Smith said it's very unusual for the EPA to get a letter from a town. Requests usually come through the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), she said. Smith said there are only 100 Superfund sites in New England and 1,200 across the country.

She said the EPA would review the material and talk to the state and town about the circumstances that brought the request to the EPA's attention.

The Mariner's phone call was the first Moehrke had heard about the water commission's letter to the EPA, which was copied to U.S. Senators Edward Kennedy and John Kerry and US Rep. William Delahunt. CHL owner Paul Barry's spokesman Robert Schwandt referred the Mariner to Moehrke for comment.

Moehrke, who said he would look into the matter before commenting on specifics, said McNabb has another agenda. McNabb is an activist with SAFE (Stop Any Further Expansion), a local grassroots group opposed to the landfill, and has spoken in Abington about Barry's efforts to build a transfer station in that town.

"The role he plays as chairman of the water commission my be influenced by his advocacy role opposing CHL and his involving himself in the Abington project," Moehrke said.

"Clearly the landfill under no set of circumstances warrants placement on the list," he said. "It's a gross misuse of environmental resources."

McNabb said there is no hidden agenda.

"We feel it's a truly important environmental issue," he said. "Our only agenda is to protect the quality of the drinking water supply. We're looking for every avenue we can to call attention to the potential threat from CHL and deal with it as best we can."

The federal Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act (CERCLA) provides the foundation for placing contaminated sites on the Superfund list. At the very least, sites on the Superfund list received extra environmental scrutiny from the EPA. In some cases, the federal government has provided funds and forced polluters to contribute to clean-up costs.

Citizens can petition the EPA with a one-page letter to put any site on the list. The EPA regional office closest to the contaminated site has to launch an official investigation within one year.

"EPA looks at the land, water and air, and then looks for routes of potential exposure from contaminants," McNabb said. "The biggest source of potential exposure from CHL is surface water run-off. And EPA's software calculations show that CHL should be considered."

McNabb said the water commission's case against CHL is bolstered by the fact that the nearby Norfolk Conveyor site is on the list of potential federal National Priority List "Superfund" sites. In 1984, an oil spill at the Norfolk Conveyor site required an extensive environmental clean up. Clean up crews found dozens of large drums buried at the site. EPA placed Norfolk Conveyor on the list of potential Superfund sites because of the drums. McNabb said state officials have determined that the Norfolk Conveyor site is clean and safe now. But the criteria that got Norfolk Conveyor on the potential Superfund site list also apply to CHL because the two locations are so close to each other.

"The kind of contaminants at a site are important to EPA, but almost as important is where the site is located," McNabb said. "CHL is within a quarter-mile of Norfolk Conveyor, it's upgrade from Lily Pond, and EPA looks at how many people are served by the water supply. Norfolk Conveyor received enough points to be on the list, and CHL is a stone's throw away."

Trench possible

McNabb said that one of the most important aspects of placing CHL on the Superfund list is EPA's presumptive remedy for former municipal landfills that pose environmental threats. Twenty-five percent of Superfund sites are former municipal solid waste landfills, McNabb said. (CHL, a privately-owned landfill, was limited to construction and demolition debris). If CHL is placed on the Superfund list and found to be an environmental hazard, EPA would require the owner of the landfill to dig a trench around the facility.

CHL has submitted a closure plan to DEP that does not include a trench. Norfolk Environmental analyzed the closure plan and sent a recommendation to DEP urging the state agency to force CHL to dig a trench around the landfill.

"This petition by itself will succeed in getting EPA to oversee the final closure of the landfill," McNabb said. "In addition, EPA will review the state Department of Environmental Protection's regulation of CHL, and potentially recommend that the closure include the construction of a groundwater diversion trench around the landfill to keep any contaminated leachate from draining into the Lily Pond watershed."

McNabb said he hoped that EPA's close scrutiny of DEP's work will force the state agency to do a better job of regulating CHL. DEP has not yet responded to Norfolk Environmental's recommendation that CHL dig the water diversion trench around the landfill. DEP must approve CHL's final closure scheme, and can order changes in the plan.

Little Harbor septic solution

replacement can be up to $60,000."

Unhappy with the town's method of solving the area's septic problems, CEES members sought an alternative solution. After discussions with engineers, they formulated a plan for a privately funded septic system to serve approximately 275 homes in the Little Harbor watershed.

The proposed water treatment plant is planned for a one-acre parcel of land behind Alex Koines' home at 380 Atlantic Ave., from which effluent is to be piped about 1000 feet underneath Sandy Beach to a nearby leaching field.

Herlin said the septic system and treatment plant are estimated to cost between $4 million and $5.9 million, depending upon the number of homeowners who join.

"We're estimating it would cost $22,000 per household if all the homes in the district signed up, and about $29,000 per household if half of them sign up," Herlin said.

Board of Health member Steve Bobo said a privately funded Little Harbor septic system could save the town a great deal of money in upgrading sewer systems in the area.

"A private septic system could save the town 50 or 60 percent, because the town won't have to go through the bid process or pay prevailing wages as they normally would on a sewer project," Bobo said.

The Board of Health has submitted a $20,000 warrant article for the Mar. 25 town meeting to conduct a feasibility study of the proposed septic system and treatment plant.

"We have to study the plant to see if it will work," Herlin said. "It's sort of like what's going on with the school renovations. You have to put in some money for the planning before you can build something."

Though the septic system is to be funded by area residents, Bobo said the town would oversee the project. If the treatment plant is built, the town is to assume control of its operations.

"The town would take it over and charge fees to the users like in other parts of town," Bobo said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he and Board of Health members will need to understand the legal ramifications of taking over the plant before going forward.

"We've got to be very careful with this," Haddad said. "We need to understand the legal impacts of the town's involvement."

Last week, CEES members presented their septic system plan to DEP representatives following a meeting between those representatives and town officials.

Bobo said the DEP officials seemed impressed with the idea of a privately funded septic system near Little Harbor.

"The state was very enthusiastic about it," Bobo said. "The town has never done anything like this before, so the state's going to have to help us with it."

Herlin said letters describing the plan have gone out to all the homes in the Little Harbor watershed.

"We want to get the word out, because the cost per homeowner will go down as more users sign up."

Smoking ban goes to town meeting health of kids. What's wrong with Cohasset having this law?"

Selectman Ronnie McMorris said an underage smoking ban could be a case of government overstepping its bounds.

"Should government be fining people for things they shouldn't be doing?" McMorris asked. "I question government's involvement in this issue. Buying is one thing, but we're also talking about using."

Under current law, the store owner or employee, not the youth, is fined when minors are caught buying cigarettes or tobacco.

Selectman Merle Brown said store owners should not solely be held liable for underage tobacco purchases.

"They fine the guy in the store selling the stuff, and the kid walks away happy," Brown said.

Haddad said he supports the bylaw, but McMorris had reservations about the implications of passing a youth smoking ban.

"Is this the only thing government should fine people for?" she asked. "And why only target people under 18?"

Selectmen were unable to come to a consensus on a recommendation for the article Tuesday night and agreed to defer a decision until town meeting.

Girls hoop continues to grow

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After winning two of their last three games to maintain a plus .500 record, the girls junior varsity basketball team may become a varsity club in the near future. Ellen Carr, coach of the squad seems optimistic.

"There is a strong possibility it will go that way," states Carr. "But we are not sure just how it will play out."

With the team's record standing at 9-8, and one game remaining on the schedule, Carr thinks playing at the varsity level would be a challenge, but that her team is ready for it.

"Varsity is more intense," she says. "But I think that would be good for the kids."

The team's roster, with a meager seven names on it, is comprised of four freshmen, two sophomores, and one junior, Katie Wenmark. With such a young squad, there were not many firm believers at the beginning of the season that the girls program would be back at the varsity level so soon.

However, with everyone contributing, this season, at least in the eyes of Carr, has been a success.

"The goal of a coach," states Carr, "is to get a team to respond in practice to what is needed in a game. These girls have shown a lot of maturity... Katie has been a quiet, mature leader, and the two sophomores [Liza Parker and Kerry Long] who had never played before this year, have made great improvements."

One reason Carr believes squad may have the ability to move to a varsity schedule was their 48-23 thrashing of the Norwell Clippers last week.

"We played very well against Norwell," enthused Carr.

In the game, freshmen Heather Peraino and Lindsay Grossman scored 21 and 19 points respectively, and freshman co-captain Maura O'Brien snatched six rebounds and dished out three assists.

A few days later, Cohasset was defeated 49-45 by a strong Abington team. The Green Wave has one of the finest programs on the South Shore. Peraino again led the Lady Skippers with 27 points, including three 3-pointers.

This past Monday, Cohasset beat Canton 35-29 to ensure at least a .500 record.

So what do the coming years look like in the eyes of the players?

"I hope we do [move up]. Not many people anticipated us to do well, and we had to prove them wrong," said O'Brien with a laugh.

But whether the girls take the next step or not, Carr has maintained a positive attitude.

Skippers tangle with the best

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

Ron Ford is going to be busy answering questions for the next week or so.

The Cohasset High boys basketball coach has played both Cardinal Spellman and Norwell, the expected top two seeds of the Div. 3 South Sectional You can expect him to be asked who is better about a thousand times.

They played Spellman in their Christmas Tournament, while the Skippers battled Norwell twice during the regular season.

Cohasset gave Spellman problems before dropping a 59-55 decision.

"We out-played Spellman," said Ford. "It wasn't their night. Norwell beat us by 20 the first time and he (Clipper coach John Willis) has them peaking at the right time.

"Spellman is a very good team and (coach) Mike Perry does a great job."

Ford said teams will have to get by the locals if they want to make it UMass-Boston, the FleetCenter and eventually, the Worcester Centrum.

"In Div. 3, the road goes through the South Shore," he said.

Ford expects the Clippers, Hanover and Rockland be in the mix.

After seeing the Clippers for a second time, he wouldn't be surprise to see Norwell left standing in the South when it is all said and done.

"You're going to be watching them in the FleetCenter or UMass-Boston," predicted Ford.

The Skippers will play Norwell again in the South Shore Tourney, which starts on Tuesday, Feb. 22 in Hingham. They'll play either tournament-bound Hingham or Marshfield in either the consolation or championship game on Wednesday, Feb. 23.

Whether they are one of the top teams, like they have been in the past, or a young club like they are this year, no one can accuse the Skippers of ducking the good teams.

"I believe in playing up," said Ford after Friday night's 84-58 loss to Norwell at home. "I knew this was going to be tough, but the kids put a lot of effort into the offseason and you want them to play against the best. They work hard and want to play the toughest competition."

Ford figures the pros of playing a tough schedule are greater than wins of playing a bunch of weaker teams in nonleague games and getting into the tourney that way.

"If you're good enough to make the tournament, you'll make it," said Ford. "You're not getting any better by not playing good teams."

Don't get use to Cohasset being out of the postseason. With the young talent they have returning, the Skippers will be again fighting for the tournament.

"We'll be back," said Ford.

What he likes about his team is that they have continued to battle even after being eliminated for the tournament.

"All of my guys play hard," said Ford.

He has been using the time to get a look at some of his younger talent.

During the second half of Friday night's game, he placed freshman Dan Lynner on Norwell's Dan McNamara.

"He is learning and he has a lot of potential," said Ford. "I wanted him to cover (McNamara) because he's the best player. (McNamara) did the same thing when he was a freshman."

Ford has also been able to get good looks at sophomore guard Matt Bilodeau and junior forward Eric Shea.

"Matt is going to be my point-guard of the future," said Ford. "Eric is a good shooter and plays good defense. He has a lot of promise."

Senior Kevin Andrews was the top scorer for Cohasset against Norwell with 22 points, while Shea had 21.

McNamara and freshman Gerry Corcoran each had 27 points for the Clippers.

Pratt brings home South title

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Div. 3 state tournament is loaded with South Shore athletes hoping to bring home a state title.

A contingent of four wrestlers will be representing Cohasset at Wayland on Friday, Feb. 18 and Saturday, Feb. 19. Chris Pratt was the sectional champ at 125. Dan Littauer took fifth at 140. Liam O'Donnell had a solid showing at 160, finishing second, as did Kevin DeVito as 171. Junior Dan Duffy was seventh at 130 and sophomore John Hussey was eighth at 215.

"Pratt was a finalist last year," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "He worked hard all summer to come back and win the states. It's quite an accomplishment for him to win. He'll be in a very tough weight class. There are two defending state champions in his division, but he is seeded second."

Pratt dominated the sectional, pinning the first two opponents, winning the semifinals by a score of 11-2, then the finals, 7-1. O'Donnell also pinned his first two opponents, then won a thriller in the semifinals when he defeated the number one seed in overtime.

"That was a great accomplishment," said Sweeney. "It was a good battle."

DeVito lost in the finals in overtime, on what Sweeney termed "a peculiar illegal hold."

"There's an extremely gray area on the call," said Sweeney.

Sweeney was happy to see his senior wrestlers do well though.

"Liam and Kevin have pretty much been working together all year long," said Sweeney. "Littauer is just a sophomore, and he still took fifth at 140. That might be the toughest weight class, along with 125."

It was a promising performance from a young team.

"It was hard for us to do well team-wise, but it will help us build well for next year," said Sweeney. "I'm happy with the way the seniors finished. I'm looking forward to see how the seniors do this weekend."

"I'm happy with the way the seniors finished. I'm looking forward to see how the seniors do this weekend..."

Scituate will be sending six wrestlers to states. They will be seeded in the same order in which they placed at sectionals. Kyle Giacomozzi finished third at 119. Chris Peters was sixth at 125. Andrew Golder took third at 130, and Tariq Yasim was fifth at 171.

At 215, Phil Martin was fourth for Scituate, while Marlin Pontes was fifth in the heavyweight division.

To prepare and stay fresh for the state tournament, the Sailors have been practicing with Hanover during the week. The Indians had two sectional champs in Matt Dunn at 145 and Matt Hawrilenko at 215. Jim Lothrop was fourth at heavyweight, and Chris Delaney was third at 189.

Seven wrestlers will be representing Norwell High. Dan Linchutte took sixth at 130, as did Grant Spraudlin at 135. Mike Robertson came in second at 140, while Mike Dye was third at 152. Ron Anderson grabbed a sisth place finish at 160, and Steve Mott was second at 189. Sean Acton took sixth at 215.

Rockland had a strong showing the sectionals last weekend, placing seven wrestlers in the states.

"We wrestled exceptionally well," said coach Ken Leer. "We came in fourth out of twentysomething teams. I couldn't have asked for things to go any better. We wrestled beyond our expectations."

Frank Sforza captured a sectional title for the second year in a row. Sforza, who won at 103 last year, took home the title at 112.

"He just dominated," said Leer. "I expected Frankie to be first or second."

Dave Laramee was fourth at 103, and Brian Sforza, just an eighth-grader, was fifth at 119. Zack Gorman took seventh at 125. Rob Affleck was third at 130.

At 135, Phil Carnathan was fifth. Ed O'Neill was fourth at 152. Matt Wilkins came in fourth at 160, and Rob Shemkus was sixth at 171.

"We showed a lot of strength to come in fourth," said Leer. "Carnathan was a nice surprise."

Deer Hill pupils sell firewood to benefit playground project

The kids at Deer Hill badly need playground equipment. The cost is between $12,000 and $15,000.

Aaron Berard and Adam Yeager wanted to help in some way. They got a donation of a truckload of bagged firewood from a local businessman to sell. Aaron and Adam sold out before 4 p.m. the first day and they raised $3,095 for Deer Hill's new playground equipment.

So far $6,300 has been raised. The kids voted for their top three choices out of six possible items.

The PSO would like to buy all six. Of the $6,300, the boys raised $3,095; the Cohasset Rotary Club generously donated $1,600 toward swings. Through the PSO there have been numerous fund-raisers over the last eight months.

If you have made a donation, thank you. If you have not, please consider either financially or physically donating. Give these kids a safe fun place to play.

Donations may be made to the Cohasset Public School Playground Equipment Fund. For further information, call Adrienne MacCarthy at 383-1028 or Susan Galligan, 383-0765.

Summer Arts at Derby Academy

Registration is now open for "Summer Arts at Derby 2000" at Derby Academy in Hingham. Summer Arts is a comprehensive five-week arts program for ages eight to 15. The program is staffed by professional artist/teachers and includes more than 90 courses in drama, visual arts, newspaper and creative writing, dance, sports, gymnastics, photography, music, animation and martial arts. A newspaper is printed every day and a full-scale musical is produced. Students choose their own schedules and there is a daily free-choice period to try new things. The program culminates in an all-day Arts Festival celebrating the talents of the students through performances and exhibits of their work.

The goal of the program is to allow students to explore a wide range of activities and to encourage their individual talents. Campers from more than 20 communities share a special summer through the arts.

Summer Arts announces the addition of three new buildings to the campus this year, including a new theatre, gymnasium and dining hall. The 311-seat theatre is acoustically designed for young people, and is fully equipped with a computerized light and sound system. The new gymnasium houses two basketball courts and the students will enjoy a spacious new dining hall.

The dates of the program are June 26 to July 28; 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday. Tuition for the five-week program is $1,400; enrollment is limited. For applications and more information, call Thalia McMillion, director, at (781) 740-4766.

Save box tops!

This year, the Deer Hill School is participating in a fund-raiser the entire community can get involved with — without a great deal of effort. It's called Box Tops for Education and it's sponsored by General Mills.

This year they are raising money to purchase new playground equipment for the school. Through this program, they have already collected $100 toward the goal of $500.

Organizers ask parents, neighbors, relatives and friends to save Box Tops for Education logos from General Mills cereals, snacks, Betty Crocker fruit snacks, Yoplait yogurt multi-packs, Yoplait Go-GURT, and Lloyd's Barbecue Buckets products. The school will receive 10 cents for every box top collected.

There are collection receptacles located at the Deer Hill Library, the Paul Pratt Library and the Cohasset Transfer Station.

World famous acrobats swung through Cohasset acrobatics show at London's Adelphi Theatre in December 1846.

From there, the boys traveled with Lees to France and Spain, where they performed before Queen Isabella II. In Spain, the boys also struck up a friendship with Countess Eugenie of Theba, then a teenager, who would later marry Napoleon III and become Empress of France.

After their initial encounter with royalty, the boys traveled with Lees to Egypt, climbing pyramids in between performances. They then went to India, followed by trips to Singapore, Australia, South America, and Cuba.

The trip to Cuba marked a dramatic turning point in their lives. Professor Lees, who had become very much like a father to the boys, caught yellow fever on the journey and died in 1855, nine years after the boys had begun performing.

After Lees died, the boys returned home to their family in England, where their parents wanted them to work as actors. The boys had traveling in their blood, however, and resisted parental pleas to remain nearby.

George, William, and Alfred not only left home for the allure of the world-wide stage, but this time they brought brothers Thomas, Frederick, and Edward along with them. Older and stronger than when first performing as young boys, the brothers increased the difficulty of their maneuvers, graduating from tumbling to trapeze acts and high-wire stunts.

"These guys were just incredible. They went all over Europe, performing for kings and queens, and went to Egypt, India, South America. Imagine doing that in the 1840s. It's amazing."

— Historical society member Tom Gruber

Once again, the brothers started around the globe, performing in France, Egypt, and the United States. Anxious to avoid the events of the Civil War, the Hanlons accepted an offer for a two-year tour in Russia. They then returned to the U.S., appearing in cities not affected by the war.

All of the brothers were adults by the late 1860's, and began performing even more dangerous stunts. One was called the Leap for Life, in which one of the brothers would jump from trapeze to trapeze across the entire length of a theater as the stunned audience looked up from their seats.

Without any kind of allowances for safety, every Hanlon who attempted the Leap for Life was risking his own demise.

"The philosophy at that time was if you fell, you deserved it because you must not be doing your job," said town archivist David Wadsworth, who keeps a collection of Hanlon artifacts.

Oldest brother Thomas would become a victim of such an unforgiving philosophy. While performing the Leap for Life at Pike's Opera House in Cincinnati, Thomas fell landing on a lighting apparatus and splitting his head open. He suffered brain damage and was committed to an asylum by his devastated brothers, where he died soon after.

The fall of their eldest sibling devastated the other brothers. Wishing to prevent such calamities in the future, they designed the first safety net for trapeze acts, which they patented. They also held patents on a number of contraptions used in magic acts, including boxes which created the illusion of sawing a person in half.

The Hanlons also held a patent on a mode of transportation used my millions of people every day, the rubber-tired bicycle. One of the original "Hanlon" bicycles is even on display at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington D.C.

"Some of their inventions were so far ahead of their time," Gruber said. "They were incredibly clever people."

The Hanlons spent much of the 1870s and early 1880s traveling the world, spending a portion of the time headlining at the Folies Bergere in Paris. As they grew older and had families, however, the constant travel wore on them and they looked to settle down.

After seeing every corner of the globe, the brothers decided to settle in the United States. Drawn by Cohasset's beaches and the thriving theatrical community in town at the time , the Hanlons moved to Cohasset in 1888.

William Hanlon bought a home at 278 Jerusalem Rd., near the corner of Atlantic Ave. He had the first floor raised to become a second story, and added a new first floor to the colonial-style house. Another of the brothers rented a home on Ripley Road, near the corner of Sohier Street.

The brothers built a large practice facility on the Ripley Road site now occupied by Carousel Antiques. The stage was large enough to hold 30 to 40 performers at the same time. A seven-story building nearby was used to practice leaps and jumps.

By the time the Hanlons moved to Cohasset, however, they had moved from taking dangerous leaps to organizing the shows and designing props.

"They phased out of the daredevil stuff as they got older," Wadsworth said. "They took stock of the situation and became impresarios instead of performers."

By the turn of the century, the Hanlons had significantly slowed down their schedule of shows. William stayed in Cohasset and the Boston area for years afterward and some of the other brothers settled in New York.

While their Cohasset studio was razed in 1915, the Hanlon legacy lived on in the performances of others who followed in their footsteps.

"The Hanlons were the original vaudeville comics," Wadsworth said. "They were the forerunners of the Three Stooges and Buster Keaton, but they did the acrobatic things as well. I would have loved to have seen those shows. They must have been fantastic."

The time they spent in Cohasset may be only a part of the Hanlons' amazing story, but Gruber said he is proud the historical society was chosen to publish it.

"This is a slice of something which probably wouldn't have been published any other way," Gruber said. "We can't verify the accuracy of everything in the book, but it would be a shame to see these stories lost. We felt preserving this information fit with the mission of the historical society."

OBITUARIES

Eleanor Seksay

Mrs. Eleanor L. Seksay, 79, a resident of Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home, died Jan. 28. She was the last surviving child of Harry Ramey Humbert and Mary Ryan Humbert and was predeceased by her husband James Stephen Seksay.

Mrs. Seksay was born into a coal-mining and construction family and graduated in 1937 from Redstone High School in Collier, Penn. Her family lived in Colonial Mine Town #3, which was located next to Grindstone, Penn., and commonly known as Rowe's Run. She met her husband James Stephen Seksay, a coal miner, there. They married on Nov. 25, 1939, at St. Cecelia's Church in Grindstone and afterwards moved to Carmichaels, Penn. In 1960 the Seksay family moved to Cleveland, Ohio, following a downturn in the coal mining industry. Mrs. Seksay worked as dietitian in several hospitals in the greater Cleveland area, including Mount Sinai Hospital and St. Vincent's Charity Hospital. In 1980 she took a temporary break from work to nurse her husband during his final bought with cancer. After her husband's death, she returned to dietary management and traveled extensively, including a trip to Mainland China. In 1984 Mrs. Seksay had a stroke, which resulted in brain damage which left her paralyzed over most of her body. She required constant nursing care from that point until her death.

Mrs. Seksay leaves her son James A. Anderson of Cleveland, Ohio; a daughter, Janet Seksay Szymanski of Hull; two sons, John R. Seksay of Raleigh, North Carolina; and Edward H. Seksay of Cohasset; and eight grandchildren.

A funeral Mass will be held today at 10 a.m. at St. Anthony's Church in Cohasset. A memorial service will also be held at Corrigan Funeral Home in Cleveland, Ohio, at 1 p.m. on Feb. 5.

Arrangements were by the McNamara-Sparrell Funeral Home in Cohasset.

Memorial contributions may be made to the adoption agency Love the Children, 221 West Broad St., Quakertown, Penn., 18951.

Mitigation chairman discusses village station

Parking would be altered dramatically

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Coupled with attempts at downtown revitalization, the planning board's vote last month in favor of a village site for Cohasset's Greenbush commuter rail station has brought new life to what appeared to be a dead issue.

While selectmen have not said they will revisit their November 1996 decision to place the station on Route 3A, some have been wondering exactly what changes a village station would bring to the downtown area.

"If this commuter rail line turns out to be a huge success, parking could be a problem. Between that and the Red Lion Inn, I don't know how much parking we'll need."

— Mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber

The MBTA could still change the location of the station from 3A to the village, but Cohasset mitigation committee chairman Tom Gruber said such flexibility will soon be a thing of the past.

"That window isn't going to stay open for very long," he said. "The T is going to have to firm this thing up soon. Right now, they can't go beyond 30 percent designs until they get environmental approvals. Once that happens, they'll go from 30 percent to 70 percent with great speed."

Gruber said the mitigation committee is dedicated to supporting the selectmen on their choice of location for the commuter rail station.

INSIDE GREENBUSH

"My feeling is it's a selectmen's decision, not a mitigation issue," he said. "We'll do whatever they want us to do."

Gruber, who says he has no position on the location of the station, said downtown parking would be significantly affected by a village station.

"The MBTA's 1996 plans for a downtown station show 100 spaces for the town lot and 350 spaces for the MBTA," he said. "How to keep commuters out of the town lot is a giant issue."

Some residents and business owners have already expressed concern about downtown parking with the renovated Red Lion Inn expected to open by summer. Gruber said finding adequate parking for the commuter rail and downtown businesses will have to be addressed.

"If this commuter rail line turns out to be a huge success, parking could be a problem. Between that and the Red Lion Inn, I don't know how much parking we'll need. I have no idea about those answers."

Gruber said the current mitigation plans call for an expanded town lot of 157 spaces, due to street parking to be lost to the tracks.

Current plans call for the tracks to run between ABB Optical and the South Shore Art Center. Under the MBTA's plans for a village station, however, those tracks are to be moved to the other side of the ABB Optical and closer to residences on James Lane and Pleasant Street. Gruber estimated the relocation to be about 100 feet at Pleasant Street.

Moving the location of the tracks would also invalidate the calculations made to determine noise and vibration mitigation at ABB Optical and the Art Center.

Another change in the village brought on by a downtown station would be the speed of the train. With a Route 3A station, Gruber said the trains will go through downtown at about 30 miles per hour. With a village station, the train would slow to a stop downtown.

Gruber said he has been contacted by people questioning if the MBTA really needs an 800-foot platform for a station in the village. The MBTA has included the 800-foot platform in mitigation plans for both a 3A and a village station because the maximum train length is 800 feet and all trains must be handicapped-accessible in order to meet requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act [ADA].

While the MBTA could apply for an waiver from the 800-foot requirement, Gruber said he doubts it will press the issue with the federal government.

"It's possible to apply for exemptions from ADA, so theoretically they can," he said. "However some T stations are not in compliance with ADA, such as Park Street in Boston, where people change from the green line to the red line. If they push for an exemption, the feds may not look favorably upon it."

Safe ice advisory issued

By Jack Worley
RECREATION DIRECTOR

With the winter season upon us, residents of all ages look for outdoor areas for ice skating. Elm's Meadow, located at Cushing Road and Spring Street, has been prepared by the DPW for skating, and lights, until 9:30 p.m., are also on for night skating. Elm's Meadow offers a regulated, shallow area for safe skating.

As with any outdoor skating area the ice should be tested before venturing on it. There are specific ways to test ice safety which do not include throwing debris such as rocks, sticks etc. on the ice making it hazardous for everyone.

Rather, test the ice by the edge of a skating area by carefully stepping out 6" to 8", proceeding carefully to about 2' out from the edge only if the ice appears to be safe under your weight. Chip the ice with a tool or stick until you can ascertain a rough idea as to the thickness of the ice. You should always have another person with you when doing this.

Many outdoor skating areas do not have the same thickness of ice universally over the area. Always be on guard for soft spots or thin ice which manifest from underground springs, drain pipes etc. etc. This is especially true at Elm's Meadow by the Spring Street/Cushing Road corner of the area due to drains off the hillside.

Stay off salt water ice completely.

These figures are for clear, fresh water ice only; for snow ice, add 2 inches; for water logged ice, add 3 inches; if skates cut in — go home. Salt water in mild climates is always treacherous, keep away from it. Also thickness in 40-50 degree column are safe depths for short periods of time only.

GENERAL SAFE ICE STANDARDS

Ice safe for:	0-30°	30-40°	40-50°
Single skaters	1-3/4"	2-3/4"	6"
Couples:	2-3/4"	3-3/4"	8"
Crowds:	3-3/4"	4-3/4"	12"

IT'S HAPPENING

Internet safeguards

"Safe in Cyberspace: Preparing Parents and Children for the Internet" will be the topic of a lecture by David Greenfield, Ph.D., nationally renowned psychologist and author of "Virtual Addiction," which will take place Monday, March 6, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at St. Anthony Parish Center, 10 Summer St.

Dr. Greenfield is one of the country's leading researchers on the subject of Internet addiction. Copies of Dr. Greenfield's book will be available for purchase. This program is cosponsored by the Cohasset PSO and the Social Service League of Cohasset. For more information, call (781) 383-0771.

Story of Noah

On Sunday, March 5, at 2 p.m., the weather will turn frightful as The Jubilate Choir of St. Stephen's Church performs "100% Chance of Rain." Originally performed in 1972 by the Choristers Guild of Texas, "100% Chance of Rain" is the story of Noah's struggles and triumphs. Through song and dialogue, the story of the great flood unfolds. With rousing musical numbers such as "Gonna Build an Ark" and "The Admirable Admiral," Noah and his family build the Ark and survive the flood. The beautiful ballad "At the Sign of the Rainbow" fulfills God's promise and tells us we are all part of God's Rainbow. Music directors are Fred Guzasky and Linda DeRosa-Coakley.

A free-will offering will be taken, and the children will determine which organization will be the recipient.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For more information, call the church office at 383-1083.

Art class for pet lovers

The South Shore Art Center is offering an opportunity for pet lovers to capture their beloved pets in portraits. The Pet Portraits in Pastels workshop will begin with a portrait demonstration by the instructor, pastel artist Anne Heywood. The class will work on individual paintings assisted by expert individual instruction. Students will learn how to achieve a likeness of their pet, and how to render fur, feathers and unique markings. Participants are asked to bring photos of their pet to the workshop and the paintings will be made from the photos. Students will be provided with a materials list and tips on how to take good pet photos appropriate for portraits.

Heywood was winner of the International Association of Pastel Society's 1997 Convention Image Award, the Pastel Society of America's 1995 Holbein Award, and the 1997 Northern Colorado Art Association's Pastel Society of America Award. Heywood's pastels have appeared in one-woman, juried and invitational shows throughout New England and the United States. She was recently inducted into the National Association of Women Artists, a 100-year-old organization including among its past members American impressionist Mary Cassatt. She was just awarded first place in the Wickford Art Association's "All Creatures Great and Small" exhibition for a pet portrait. Heywood has taught a number of pastel classes at the South Shore Art Center for all levels of students. This is the first time she has dedicated a SSAC workshop to painting animals. The workshop, for students with previous experience in pastels, will be Saturday, Feb. 26, from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For information or to register, call 383-ARTS.

Coffee House off the Square

On Saturday, Feb. 19, at 8 p.m. the Old Ship Church's Coffee House off the Square presents a varied double bill, singer-songwriter Ben Tousley and the Latin guitar duo, Tolino.

Ben Tousley has been part of the Boston folk scene since the early '80s while also touring nationally and in Ireland and England. His rich baritone voice and varied songs create lively engaging concerts blending hopeful topical songs, gospel, blues, wry stories and lyrical love songs. He is a Unitarian minister and spiritual concerns are among the many threads in his music.

The Latin guitar duo Tolino is one of several groups featuring Gian Carlo Brascaglia. Since 1984, he has been regularly featured at stages ranging from Cambridge's Green St. Grill and Forest Cafe to Chez Henri. Whether solo, in the duo Tolino, or in larger groups like the renowned Puerto Rican/Cuban group Balaton, he performs compelling boleros, protest songs, Son Cubano (Cuban Sun) and the evocative sounds of Nueva Cansion, the New Song movement.

The evening starts with an open mike, giving all singers, mimes, poets, actors, jugglers etc. a chance to be seen by the enthusiastic audience.

The Coffee House is at the Old Ship Church's fully accessible Parish Hall, 107 Main St., Hingham Square. Admission is $10 at the door ($5 with a Boston Folk Festival button) and coffee, tea, cider and desserts are available for 50 cents. Net proceeds benefit programs of the Unitarian-Universalist Service Committee. For information, call Jim Watson at 781-749-1767.

Candidates flock to Town Hall

Michael Sullivan announces run for selectman

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

With today's deadline for obtaining nomination papers for the April 8 town election fast approaching, a flood of candidates appeared at the Town Clerk's office this week to launch possible campaigns.

Former selectman Michael Sullivan announced he will run again for a seat on the town's chief executive board, saying he was ready for office again after a two-year respite.

"It had been ten years in office between the Board of Health and being a selectman," Sullivan said. "I wanted a break."

Sullivan decided not to run for reelection when his three-year term expired in 1998, but became the third citizen to declare his candidacy for the open seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan. Planning board member Robert Sturdy and former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins have also announced their candidacies for selectman.

Sullivan said he thinks the school renovation project is the most important issue facing the town and said its success is crucial to the town's future.

"For years, the town basically let the infrastructure deteriorate," he said. "Look at the sewer situation, the water, and the old DPW garage. We're still in the midst of rebuilding and the school project is a huge part of that. It needs to be done right. A Band-Aid approach won't work with 50 year-old buildings."

In addition to upgrading the town's infrastructure, Sullivan said keeping finances under control will be a crucial issue in the coming years.

"Every year, we have to decide whether to go for overrides or do level funding," he said. "I wonder if we're going to get to the point where we can't live under Proposition 2 1/2."

Three candidates have also come forward in the race for the two school committee seats being vacated by Betsy Connolly and Kathy Ofsthun.

Former state senatorial candidate Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts, and former health board candidate Charles H. Sturdy obtained nomination papers for school committee this week, joining former advisory committee member Richard Flynn, who declared his candidacy last week.

Tebbetts, who finished second to Brian McDonald in the 1992 Democratic primary for the Norfolk/Plymouth senate seat, said she hadn't planned to run for the school committee but decided to become a candidate when only Flynn had announced his candidacy for the board.

"I had a tweak of conscience," she said. "I wondered if anyone was going to step up to bat here. It matters to me a great deal that kids in this town have support, and I could think of more reasons to run than not to."

Tebbetts is a former member of the Government Structure Committee and the Sewer Advisory Board. She said she wants to hear citizens' thoughts on the school renovation project before the April 8 election.

"I believe we need to fix up these buildings, but I understand it's a lot of money," she said. "I don't go into this with any answers. It will be a learning experience for me."

Charles H. Sturdy, who lost to Robin Lawrence last year in his bid for the Board of Health, obtained nomination papers for the school committee Tuesday afternoon and could not be reached for comment before the Mariner went to press.

Two candidates for the planning board also obtained nomination papers this week. Former Osgood reuse committee chairman Chris Ford and Randy Patterson, 12 Ledgewood Farm Rd., are both seeking the open seat being vacated by John O'Toole.

Ford, who served for six years on the school committee in the 1980s in addition to his more recent stint on the Osgood reuse committee, said he agrees with the planning board in its support of a downtown train station.

"I think the location of the station, along with the downtown revitalization and need to find senior housing will be of critical impact to the community."

Patterson, who was vocal in his opposition to a cell tower in his Ledgewood Estates neighborhood, is a political newcomer in Cohasset. Like Sturdy, he could not be reached for comment before the Mariner went to press.

Today was the last day to obtain nomination papers for the April 8 town election. Papers must be returned by Tuesday, Feb. 22.

Absentee ballots

Absentee ballots for the Presidential Primary, March 7, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Monday, March 6, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open, physical disability, and religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican or Libertarian, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party he is enrolled in. However, if a voter is Unenrolled (Independent), he may choose his ballot. In a presidential primary only, the voter becomes enrolled in and shall remain a member of the political party whose ballot he received, until he files a certificate to have his enrollment changed to another party. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by March 7 to be counted.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Hanson native Brian Bergdoll graced the cover of New York magazine in Dec. 1997 sporting the John Travolta look that's made him famous. Bergdoll will make a guest appearance in the Company Theatre's upcoming Bee Gees tribute concert.

Bergdoll well-suited for role as Travolta

Hanson native to make guest appearance at Bee Gees tribute concert

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Actor Brian Bergdoll might still be working as a paralegal in New York City if he hadn't made a certain discovery while home visiting his parents in Hanson. "I was going through a pile of old clothes that were being set aside for either a rummage sale or the Salvation Army when I stumbled upon a white leisure suit," he recalls. "I immediately started thinking about what I could do with it."

A graduate of Thayer Academy in Braintree and New York University film school, Bergdoll had been holding down his Wall Street office job for three years when he saw a chance to reactivate his show business ambitions. "I had my father's old suit altered, learned a few dance steps and started finding work as a John Travolta look-alike at nightclubs and private parties."

With the white suit looking like it was ripped from the pages of a vintage GQ magazine, it was only natural that Bergdoll's Travolta would be from the latter's "Saturday Night Fever" period. That 1977 John Badham film made Travolta an international film star and revived the fortunes of the pop music group the Bee Gees. The Brothers Gibb provided most of the movie's dynamic, pulsating score of dance hits including "Night Fever," "How Deep Is Your Love," and "More Than A Woman."

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, many more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition I can tell you what type of stars we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 16

A Cancer moon all day prompts you to focus on home, family, domestic issues. This is not a time for making new purchases of land or property; however, influences are ideal for making repairs, redoing, repainting, refurbishing. Plan to finish old abandoned projects; tackle cleanup jobs you've been putting off. This is also a time when you can work out problems or conflicts in relationships. Stop dwelling on the past and nursing old grudges. Be willing to meet others halfway.

THURSDAY, FEB. 17

A full moon is building up, generating high energy and volatility. Stop look and listen. Avoid taking chances or doing anything risky. The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 7:51 a.m. until 9:11 a.m., when it enters Leo. A lunar alignment to Jupiter this morning warns against overdoing on any level. Don't make impulsive plans, purchases or promises. A lunar polarity to Neptune at 5:21 p.m. brings an opportunity to slow down, relax and unwind. Venus moves into Aquarius at 11:43 p.m., remaining there until March 13.

FRIDAY, FEB. 18

This day can go either way. Maintain a flexible schedule; go with the flow. Do not make important decisions. Launch new projects or sign long-term contracts. Use caution when driving or operating machinery. Try to get work projects out of the way so that you can get an early start to the weekend. The Leo moon opposes unpredictable Uranus at 2:05 p.m. and becomes inactive. Alignments of Mars/Neptune and Venus/Jupiter occur, prompting you to forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, FEB. 19

Take it slow and easy today. Think before you act. Channel high energy into constructive pursuits. At 3:33 a.m. the sun enters Pisces, traveling there until March 20. The moon enters Virgo at 10:53 a.m., and the full moon culminates at 11:27 a.m. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Jupiter serves as a buffer and prompts you to look on the bright side of things. Take quiet time out for yourself. Focus on personal issues; examine values and set new goals. Open your heart to new possibilities.

SUNDAY, FEB. 20

The combination of a Virgo moon and Mercury retrograde offers a change of pace and priorities. You can make gains on an inner, personal level rather than in your external, business world. Influences are favorable for developing projects that require research, study, analysis and for completion of projects already begun. You can achieve breakthroughs in self-understanding and free yourself of critical, limited, self-defeating attitudes. Today the Virgo moon opposes Mercury at 3:59 p.m. and becomes inactive.

MONDAY, FEB. 21

The Virgo moon is inactive until 2:21 p.m., when it enters Libra. This is a morning to clean, reorganize and get rid of clutter. The planet Mercury officially begins retrograde travel at 7:46 a.m., 17-degrees of Pisces. All new ventures, purchases are off limits until mid-March. The combination of a Libra moon and Venus/Neptune alignment makes this afternoon/evening prime for romance. Plan to spend quality time with the love in your life.

TUESDAY, FEB. 22

Partnership or relationship matters may take precedence today. Don't make waves. This is a time to work out differences; put past hurts and resentments behind you. Open the doors to a higher level of communication. All creative pursuits, artistic endeavors are highlighted; go with your imaginative side. Today's planetary influences also prompt you to zero in on bad habits and initiate programs or therapies to change them. The Libra moon becomes inactive at 10:15 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 23

The remainder of this work-week has its challenges. Be sure to take extra time out for yourself, to pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive attitude. Today the Libra moon continues inactive travel until 8:58 p.m. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and finish them; review, redo, reorganize. The moon enters serious Scorpio at 8:58 p.m. and opposes Jupiter at 11:59 p.m. Don't get caught up in late-night bickering or power struggles. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

Faster, friendlier fried chicken

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

Christopher Kimball

Although I am a great fan of authentic fried chicken, it does have its drawbacks. It requires a lot of cooking oil and it leaves a big mess. The question was, how could I get a crunchy outer coating, a moist interior and do it all quickly and easily?

My first thought was to investigate oven-fried chicken. I admit some skepticism with this approach, since I had never tasted oven-fried chicken that could hold a candle to the real thing. My own publication, Cooks Illustrated, looked into this recipe last year, and the results were good but not awe-inspiring. I then tried a variety of other oven-fried recipes, with only mediocre results. The basic approach is to dip the chicken pieces in an egg/milk mixture and then coat them with seasoned bread crumbs. The chicken pieces are then baked in a 425-degree oven for about 35 minutes. In all cases, the chicken was on the dry side, and the coating wasn't particularly crispy. Some recipes suggested using skinless pieces; others used coarsely chopped Melba toast instead of bread crumbs, which provided a hard crunch but not the flavorful crispness of true fried chicken. So I still had dry chicken and a rather dull outer coating.

To solve the dry chicken problem, I decided to soak the chicken pieces in a quick brine made from one quart of cold water, one half cup coarse salt and one tablespoon sugar. After further testing, I reduced the salt to 6 tablespoons since the chicken was a bit too salty for my taste. Next I wanted to test the egg mixture. To try and achieve maximum crispness and flavor, I tried chicken dipped in all buttermilk, all egg, egg and buttermilk, egg and a bit of oil and a combination of the three. The best combination of flavor and crispness turned out to be 2 eggs, 1/2 cup buttermilk and 2 tablespoons olive oil. The recipe worked with both skinless and regular pieces, but neither was truly satisfactory: the skin was rubbery and unappealing, and the skinless pieces were drab and tasteless.

Faced with yet another lackluster oven-fried dinner, I had an epiphany. I turned off the oven, grabbed my jar of peanut oil and decided that I was going to fry the chicken pieces in just 3/8-inch of oil. I wanted real fried chicken flavor and the crispness that only frying can produce. This shallow-fry technique was only going to work with thin pieces, so I purchased chicken cutlets (skinless, boneless chicken breasts which have been pounded to an even thickness), brined them for only 30 minutes (thinner pieces without skin need less time), used my coating recipe without the oil (the oil was only helpful when the chicken was baked in a dry, hot oven) and went to work. Finally, I had chicken worth eating, not a half-hearted compromise — a crisp, flavorful coating with juicy meat. Best of all, it took only 5 minutes of cooking!

There was still one problem. When developing my traditional fried chicken recipe, I found it helpful to let the coated chicken chill in the refrigerator before frying. The coating sticks better to the chicken and it becomes thicker and crisper. A one-hour chilling period is recommended, but if you don't have the time, try 15 minutes in the freezer. I also found that it was important to have the cutlets pounded to a uniform thickness (a quarter inch is good), although you do not want them too thin, since the meat will easily overcook. So, even with a half hour brine and 15 minutes in the freezer, this recipe can be made start to finish in an hour and you can produce real fried chicken with a minimum of fuss and bother.

Master recipe for quick skillet-fried chicken

It is important to use chicken cutlets for this recipe for quick, even cooking. If you cannot find them at the supermarket, purchase skinless, boneless chicken breasts, place them between two sheets of waxed paper, and pound with the bottom of a heavy saucepan until they are about double in size and about 1/4-inch thick. Use peanut oil here, not canola or corn oil. Also, be sure to get the oil nice and hot, about 375 degrees, before frying. If you do not have a thermometer, simply place a bit of the coating into the oil: it should bubble vigorously. Note that the cooking time will vary on the size and thickness of the cutlets. For draining the chicken, I prefer to use a clean cooling rack placed over a jelly roll pan rather than paper bags. (Never use the same cooling rack used to hold the raw chicken pieces unless it is properly cleaned first.) You can also serve this recipe for lunch in a sandwich.

4 chicken cutlets (or skinless, boneless chicken breasts pounded to an even thickness)
6 tablespoons kosher salt or 1/4 cup table salt
1 tablespoon sugar
1 quart cool water
2 cups unseasoned bread crumbs, homemade preferred
6 tablespoons cornmeal
3 teaspoons dried thyme or oregano pinch cayenne
1 teaspoon salt
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground pepper
2 large eggs
1/2 cup buttermilk
2 cups peanut oil, approximately

1. Rinse chicken pieces and place in a one gallon zip-lock bag or into a medium bowl. In a large measuring cup or pitcher, dissolve the 6 tablespoons salt and sugar in the water. Add water mixture to chicken, and refrigerate for at least 30 minutes and up to one hour. Remove the chicken pieces and rinse under cool water, pat dry and set aside. (The chicken must be completely dry.)

2. Mix together the next six ingredients (breadcrumbs through the pepper), and place in a shallow bowl. In a medium mixing bowl, whisk together the eggs and buttermilk. One at a time, dip each of the chicken pieces into the egg mixture and then in the bowl of bread crumbs. Turn the chicken over, and press crumbs onto the surface of the chicken, being careful to give a generous coating to each piece. After coating each piece, place on a large piece of waxed paper or onto a cooling rack set over a baking sheet or jelly roll pan. Refrigerate for one hour or freeze for 15 minutes.

3. Heat about 2 cups of peanut oil (the oil should be 3/8 inch deep) in a large skillet until it reaches 375 degrees. Add two pieces at a time, and fry for approximately 3 minutes on one side, and then turn and fry for an additional 2 minutes. The coating should be nicely browned, and the meat should register 160-165 degrees when measured with an instant read thermometer. If you do not have one, cut into the chicken at the thickest part to see if it is cooked through. Place cooled chicken on a clean cooling rack set over a jelly roll pan or waxed paper, cook remaining pieces, and serve hot. Serves 4.

Landscaping basics

Green thumbs up

Part 1 — getting started
By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the snow and ice gradually melt, revealing patches of bare earth, many gardeners experience an irresistible urge to venture forth into the yard in search of spring. We may poke through leaf litter to see if early flowering bulbs, such as snowdrops and crocuses, have started to push their noses up through the frozen soil or begin the process of pruning winter-damaged limbs, perhaps clipping a few dormant branches of forsythia to force into bloom indoors. While the weather may limit outdoor activities, most gardeners are already preparing for a new growing season, ordering from catalogs and starting seeds in anticipation of a garden filled with bountiful vegetables and colorful flowers.

The month of February is an ideal time to begin planning new gardens or redesigning overgrown landscapes. As you stroll through the garden to observe the beauty of the dormant winter landscape, bring along a notebook and a camera to record your observations. List changes to be made and snap a series of photographs of your home from different angles and at various times during the day. Consider the view from the street, the driveway, the front and back walkways, and from within your home.

Many landscapes, especially foundation plantings, become overgrown as they mature, but because the process is gradual, the homeowner barely realizes how dense and unattractive the shrubs have grown. In many instances, the trees and shrubs surrounding the foundation have practically swallowed up the home's exterior, obliterating windows, walkways, and views, and often causing the home's interior to become dark and gloomy. Even a well-designed landscape may need an overhaul after 20 or more years. The continuous clipping and pruning of woody plants, especially dense evergreens, can eventually produce grotesque, unnatural forms which detract from a home's appearance. A healthy, well-planned design, even when newly planted, is not only aesthetically pleasing, it increases the value of your property.

One of your first decisions is whether to undertake the design and implementation of the project yourself or to hire a professional to assist you. Obviously, there is a significant expense should you choose to engage a professional. Your decision will depend on your budget, the time you have to invest in such a project and your sense of your individual ability to do the job yourself. Large, overgrown trees and shrubs may necessitate the use of heavy equipment to remove stumps and roots, but the design and the planting can often be done by the homeowner.

If your budget allows, hiring a professional will usually achieve the most attractive and immediate results. The two primary professionals regularly enlisted to prepare a plan for your outdoor living space are the landscape designer and the landscape architect. Landscape designers should be knowledgeable about plant materials and design principles, but may not have had formal training. Landscape architects usually have an engineering degree in addition to design and horticultural experience. They tend to be more expensive but perhaps better qualified if a large scale project is anticipated. If you were planning to build a new home, a landscape architect might be employed to assist with the siting of the primary building and the installation of the landscape including a driveway, walks, retention walls, a swimming pool or a tennis court, all of which require dealing with major issues such as drainage and grading in addition to plant material. Some designers may also be qualified to perform these duties. A landscape contractor is another player often required to implement the final plans. It should be noted that many businesses are listed as landscape specialists, but their primary function is mowing lawns and general maintenance.

If you decide to hire a professional, drive around your community, perhaps to some of the newer neighborhoods, to look for landscapes which you find appealing. It is usually easy to identify landscapes designed by professionals. In the newest subdivisions, there may actually be signs crediting the designer. Look for homes with a style similar to your own. If you find the perfect setting, you may want to ask the homeowners the name of their designer. I find most homeowners do not consider this an intrusion and are often flattered to have been asked, and they may be willing to share their personal experience with that contractor. As with any major project, interview several landscapers and try to get several of their installations, both new and established, if possible, try to speak with the homeowners to find out if the project was done on schedule (weather permitting), within budget and if the contractor was cooperative and willing to listen to the client's wishes and needs.

Do not underestimate your personal ability. For as the homeowner, you are the best qualified to determine how you want your spaces to be organized and how you would like it to appear. Consult books, magazines and observe other attractive landscapes. If you are willing to do the research and proceed slowly, the pride and satisfaction at doing the job yourself are well worth the effort.

A stand-out knock out

Sax Gordon

"You Knock Me Out" (Bullseye Blues & Jazz)

Honkin' sax for the new honkellinium, produced by Duke Robillard (who's also on guitar). Derided in its day as being "exhibitionist" by jazz purists, this is the stuff you played at your rent party. The songs range from New Orleans syncopation to a Kansas City-type saxophone battle between Sax Gordon Beadle's tenor and Doug James' baritone. There's gospel-tinged sax here, as well as butt-wiggling, screaming, twisting sax, a walkin' bass and laid-back organ to keep the house jumpin'. Worcester's own Delta transplant Mickey Bones even contributes an ode to the "Twenty Dollar Gig." Everything's a stand-out here. (Grade: B+)

— Dan Osterman

Sax Gordon plays at House of Blues on Feb. 23.

Michel Petrucciani, Steve Gadd, Anthony Jackson

"Trio in Tokyo" (Dreyfus Jazz)

Pianist Michel Petrucciani is gone now, but the magnificence of his playing continues in this 1997 club date. Petrucciani was terrific with simple, spare melody as well as flights of speedy improvisation. Whether heard in studio or concert, it's impossible not to feel the joy he was obviously experiencing at the keyboard. His ballad, "Home," starts out serene and turns very happy; his signature "Little Peace in C for U" is upbeat all the way through, while giving plenty of space to drummer Steve Gadd and bassist Anthony Jackson. There's lyrical beauty to "Love Letter," a sprightliness in "Cantabile" and a new approach to "So What" that Petrucciani and Miles are probably smiling about right now. (Grade: A-)

— Ed Symkus

Warren Zevon

"Life'll Kill Ya" (Artemis)

Zevon recorded this at Fort Apache Studios in Cambridge with Paul Kolderie and Sean Slade behind the board. They strip the music down to the acoustic essentials and it's another wicked trip through the dark, mordant Zevon world. He still writes with economy and through inference, and the lyrics of "Hostage-O" and "My S#!t's F'#ked Up" resonate with various interpretations. His world view, well, look at the CD's title. Realistic while never dour and reliably unpredictable, Zevon continues to chronicle this absurd parade we call life with honesty and a wink and a nod. (Grade: B+)

— Ken Capobianco

Truls Moerk

"Edward Elgar: Cello Concerto; Benjamin Britten: Cello Symphony" (Virgin Classics)

Two first-class performances of two first-rate 20th-century British works for cello and orchestra. Britten's charged and thorny "Symphony," written for Rostropovich in 1963, offers an open and spare sonority for the richly varied orchestral accompaniment. The Elgar revels in rich Edwardian corpulence of tone and content, and like the Britten, harbors a very personal utterance. This is an ensemble disc. Cellist Moerk sounds a gifted and passionate artist with gorgeous tone and an almost feminine attack, perfectly matched to this divergent repertoire. Sir Simon Rattle, perhaps most gifted conductor of his generation, inspires his Birmingham Symphony players, resulting in brilliant arcs of concentrated musical energy. Excellent, informed program notes, too. (Grade: A-)

— John W. Ellinicle

Pat Metheny

"A Map of the World" (Warner Bros.)

Guitarist Metheny goes all acoustic in performance of his music "from and inspired by" the film of the Jane Hamilton novel. Metheny also handles the keyboards and is backed by an orchestral cast of dozens, resulting in a warm, lush, lovely listening experience, with peace of mind as the main motif. A superb jazz guitarist, Metheny most often assigns the lead lines to himself but also wisely gives the guitar some accompaniment chores. Except for a little tension and a brief percussive break, this is an album to totally relax with. It perchance it lulls you to sleep, just put it back on when you wake. (Grade: A-)

Bergdoll well-suited for Travolta role

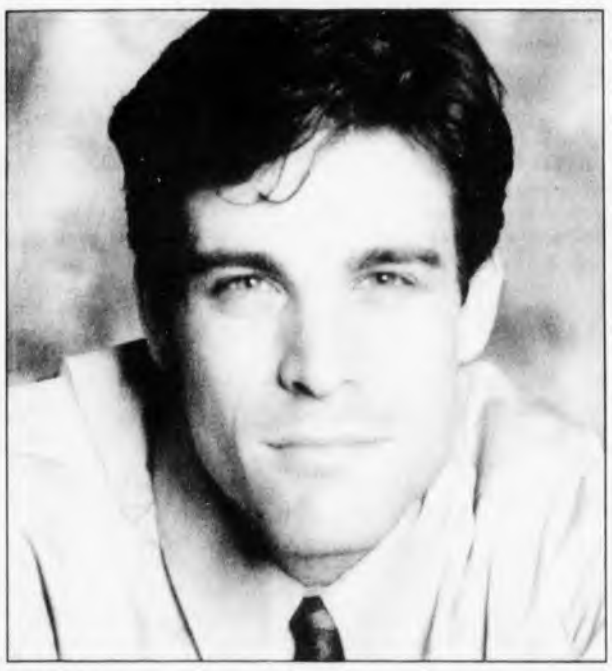
Bergdoll will make a special guest appearance as Travolta when a concert tribute to the Bee Gees, called "Stayin' Alive," comes to Norwell's Company Theatre on Feb. 25 and 26.

"Stayin' Alive" is a six-piece showband with songs and costuming designed to evoke the music of Barry, Robin and Maurice Gibb from their soft-rock 1960s hits ("I Started A Joke," "Massachusetts," "How Can You Mend A Broken Heart") to their dance fever dominance a decade later. Bergdoll will dance during the show's disco set, which also features songs made famous by K. C. & The Sunshine Band and The Commodores.



Brian Bergdoll

"I'm not really a dead-ringer for John Travolta," says Bergdoll. "What I do is more of an impersonation. My dancing is all self-taught. Some people are impressed, but I know it's not as good as the movie. I've also been humbled many times just by watching professional dancers perform."

His dancing has been good enough, however, to provide Bergdoll with a lucrative lineup of gigs. A favorite came not too long ago during a 1970s Day at a Chicago Cubs game. "Barry Williams from 'The Brady Bunch' sang the national anthem, and I ran out and danced in the dugout at the beginning of the seventh inning stretch. It was a lot of fun and my biggest audience yet," Bergdoll says with a laugh.

"I've been able to pay my rent and support myself on Travolta for a few years now," Bergdoll points out. "In the future, I'd like to be able to put this all behind me and just be a working New York actor. I want people to know me as something else, then realize that I'm also a Travolta impersonator."

With small roles in the HBO series "The Sopranos" and "Sex and the City" and bit parts in recent feature films like "54" and "The Thomas Crown Affair," the 29-year-old may soon achieve his professional goal. For many reasons, however, he isn't ready just yet to return the white suit to mothballs.

Brian Bergdoll outside Radio City Music Hall.

"I used to work a lot of nightclub events and bachelorette parties. It wasn't like I was a male stripper because nothing like that ever happened. It was more just audience interaction. I never minded being surrounded by hundreds of women, though, those conditions can make any job seem easy."

(Brian Bergdoll appears as part of "Stayin' Alive" next Friday andSaturday night at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell. For tickets and information call 781/871-2787.)

Music News

The full word on Lou Reed's new record, "Ecstasy" (Reprise), is out. The disc, to appear on April 4, is reportedly a return to his raw, rock 'n' roll approach with lots of guitar and a stripped-down sound. Band members include longtime bassist and cohort Fernando Saunders, guitarist Mike Rathke and drummer Tony Smith. And yes, his paramour, Laurie Anderson, also contributes violin to a number of tracks. The set was produced by Reed and Hal Willner, which should make for a provocative mix. One song, "Like a Possum," clocks in at 18 minutes. Expect a full tour this year, as well as a collected lyrics book. As a side project, Reed is also working with the brilliant theatrical guru Robert Wilson on a theater piece based on the work of Edgar Allan Poe. And you thought you were busy? ... A career retrospective from the band Cracker is due on March 14. "Garage D'or" (Virgin) will be a double disc with three new songs. There's also a cover of Bob Dylan's "You Ain't Going Nowhere" with Joan Osborne on backing vocals. ... Jeff Buckley fans have a reason to be cheerful. "Jeff Buckley — the Mystery White Boy" (Columbia) will be released on May 9. The posthumous record is a live double-CD recorded during Buckley's 1995-'96 tour. If you saw him perform, you know that this will be a keeper. ... Folks who miss the always fine Tony!Toni!Tone should expect the first solo effort from ex-TTT member Dwayne Wiggins, "Eyes Never Lie," from Motown on March 28. Also on tap is a disc from ex-TTT Raphael Saadiq's new project, Lucy Pearl. The latter set, on Beyond Records, will drop on May 16.

Hiring an inspector can save on costly repairs

By Ellen L. Walsh

So you've found the house you want to buy. Now you want to give it a physical check-up by hiring a professional home building inspector.

"You should find out the breadth and depth of the inspector's experience," said Harry F. Smith, owner of H. F. Smith & Associates located in Weymouth. Smith has owned his business since 1978.

According to Home Hero's web site, homehero.com, there are a number of factors to consider when hiring a home inspector. The site recommends asking how much experience the inspector and/or company have. Also, what is the professionals background and has he or she had training.

Having liability insurance and being a member of a professional Home Inspection organization are two things to ask about as well. All of this information may be on the professional brochures of some home inspection companies.

Most inspectors will provide you with a list of what their services include. They range from assessing the structure of the house, the foundation and roof, as well as checking out the condition of the plumbing and heating system. They can also check on the condition of the appliances and even check to see how well the windows slide open. Some inspectors also test for lead paint and for wood boring insects.

The inspection should take about three hours in all, and the price can range between $250 and $300. Smith says there seems to be a misconception that all inspectors are created equal.

"Price is synonymous with cheap," said Smith. What can be learned about your new home from a building inspector can save you money on costly repairs down the road, noted Smith.

Where do you find inspectors? The yellow pages, Internet, word of mouth? Those are a few good ways. Beginning May 1, 2001, the state will offer another way. Legislation is expected to be passed that will mandate that all home building inspectors be licensed by the state.

One provision of the legislation states that real estate brokers and salespeople will not be allowed to recommend a particular home inspection company or inspector to a potential buyer. However, the measure will require brokers and salespeople to provide the complete list of all licensed home building inspectors and companies. If there is no broker involved in the transaction, the list could be provided by the seller.

> "You should find out the breadth and depth of the inspector's experience."
> Harry F. Smith, H. F. Smith & Associates ,Weymouth

One more thing to note about the upcoming legislation is that it will require all licensed inspectors to be covered by an Errors and Omissions insurance policy of at least $250,000. The requirement of this insurance by the inspector is expected to drive up the price of an inspection once the legislation goes into effect.

Now, let's say you've found the house and the inspector. The best thing to do is to accompany the inspector to the inspection.

"Accompanying the inspector will allow you to ask questions and help you understand the written report," advises Home Hero. "The type of report could be a simple check list with comments, or a narrative report that explains the components of the building and provides insights as to how problems can be fixed," said Smith.

The written report is usually given to the prospective buyer within 24 hours of the inspection, noted Smith.

Safety hazards can be picked up during an inspection, noted Smith. "I inspected a home in Hingham that had corroded circuit panels," he said. He noted that the problem was a potential fire hazard. Smith's background as a builder and developer and in remodeling helps him to locate such problems.

Other safety hazards to look for are smoke detectors to make sure they are functioning. If there is an electrical garage door it should be checked to be sure it opens and closes properly.

Also, outlets must be wired for protection from electrical shock in kitchens and bathrooms.

Town Online Real Estate's web site, townonline.com, offers a list of ten home inspection tips. A few good ones are to run the dishwasher through a full cycle, boil a cup of water in the microwave and operate the oven and all burners to see if they work properly.

Although the sellers are not usually present at the time of the inspection, they should be available to answer questions that may arise during the inspection. Also, any defects in the home should be resolved between the seller and the buyer and should be put in writing.

If the professional you hired has a construction background, he can provide answers to what the costs of the immediate repairs to the house might be as well as costs to repair defects that may need to be fixed down the road.

These are all good things for the buyer to know before the final price is agreed upon.

Searching for your dream home

By Carol Bulman
PRESIDENT CONWAY FINANCIAL SERVICES

Searching for that dream home can be both an exhilarating and nerve-wracking experience, and as with most things in life, it's best to be prepared.

An idea of the mortgage amount you can afford should be determined at the very beginning of your home search. With a good idea of your qualifying potential, you can confidently pound the pavement of the real estate market. To determine the loan amount for which you qualify, a lender applies an industry-accepted formula that your loan specialist can easily explain to you. There are many lending options available to a customer purchasing a home today, but applying this formula to your income situation will give you a general idea of the home you can afford. While it's important to note that there are other factors considered by a lender when making a decision on a loan, including the amount of your down payment, debt and savings history, following this simple formula will get you in the ballpark.

Developing an idea of your affordability is helpful in narrowing the types of houses you should be shopping for, but there are more formal methods for evaluating your financing options.

PRE-QUALIFICATION

A preliminary pre-qualification for a mortgage often can be completed over the telephone, at your real estate agent's office, or at your own kitchen table, in about 30 minutes, free of charge. Most mortgage specialists would be happy to put the approximate mortgage amount for which you are qualified in writing, stating that the information used to make the determination will have to be verified.

This is a very helpful tool when presenting an offer to purchase to a home seller who, in most cases, wants to know that the potential buyer is qualified financially to purchase the home.

PRE-APPROVAL

A pre-approval, meanwhile, is one step closer to an actual mortgage commitment. This process is helpful if you have not yet decided on a particular property but would like the security of knowing exactly what you could qualify for in a mortgage.

Carol Bulman

In this case, the mortgage originator meets with you, gathers the same information as in the pre-qualification process but leaves the property information out. The information gathered is verified by sending out verification forms to employers and banks holding any of your deposit accounts. The specialist also runs a credit report and asks for tax returns, if applicable. The price for all this is simply the cost of the credit report — around $40. Once the loan has been processed, which means that all the information has been verified, you will receive an actual commitment letter or approval from the lender. You can now make an offer to a seller with full confidence that the mortgage part of the transaction will not pose a problem.

Carol Bulman is president of Norwell-based Conway Financial Services, a mortgage brokerage firm owned by Jack Conway and Company that maintains correspondent lending relationships with some of the top lenders in the East and originates a full line of mortgage products.

IN BRIEF

Pacheco leads groundbreaking ceremony

State Sen. Marc R. Pacheco led the recent groundbreaking ceremonies for Jack Conway and Company's southeast region headquarters on Route 105 in Lakeville.

In addition to Pacheco, Robert Keddy and Richard Carter of Dedham Institution for Savings, Plymouth County Development Council president Paul Durgin, builder Charles P. Magri and architect Richard Walwood turned the first spadefuls of earth at the corner of Main Street and Commercial Drive.

A crowd of more than 100 people attended the event, hosted by Conway Company chairman Jack Conway, president Richard F. Cahill, regional vice president Ralph Grassia and Lakeville office manager Brian Dalrymple.

"This is an important milestone," Conway said, "and we are honored to have so many community leaders here to help us celebrate our newest venture."

The two-story, 12,500 square-foot building will be located at the entrance to the Middleboro/Lakeville commuter train station and its 600-car parking lot. It is expected to be ready for occupancy by June 1 and will house a sales center, administrative offices and classrooms for the realty firm; the remaining office space will be leased.

The play's the thing

Henderson and Page are enthusiastic about not only the actual implementation of the theater group this year, but also the current production of Alice in Wonderland now in the works.

Henderson has directed more than 50 children's plays and musicals over the past few years as he is also a professionally trained actor and choreographer who has appeared on stage, radio, and film.

From 1992-1999, Henderson served as an apprentice at The Priscilla Beach Theater in Plymouth, and also worked at the Capachione School of Performing Arts in Bridgewater.

Henderson said it was not until 1994 that he "started directing shows around the area, mostly at Priscilla Beach Theater."

"I was doing a lot of summer stock theater," he said, noting he was directing approximately 15-20 plays a year.

Henderson said some of the plays he directed included "The Lion King," "The Lion King 2," "Madeleine," and even a production of J.R.R. Tolkein's "The Hobbit."

But as he gained more and more experience, Henderson wanted to do something independently. He attributes his decision to strike out on his own to the birth of his daughter.

"When she was born," he explained, "I knew I needed to find some new avenues."

Henderson said eventually, he would like to expand Lighthouse Theater into "an acting school," or a "non-profit organization."

Henderson said the workshop will be set up to function as a type of school.

"Children will get professional training here," he said of the Lighthouse Theater, "and they don't even have to travel into the city to do it."

He added "Unlike community theater, where everyone shows up, and they either get the part or they don't, this will act more like a school. Everyone who shows up gets a part. This kind of theater brings out the best in everyone."

Tuition for the workshop is $200 and the deadline for all "Alice in Wonderland" auditions is Feb.19. All performances and rehearsals will take place at the Beal House. Henderson said space will be limited so he encouraged signing up early.

He added there will be a total of eight weeks of rehearsals. He said all money raised from tuition will act as the funds which will pay for set designs, lighting, and other expenses.

"Kids who want to act will really enjoy the whole performance aspect of the workshops," Henderson said. "Learning by performing is the single greatest teacher there is. Depending on what you're playing, you can really do anything as an actor."

Henderson said although his workshops will be primarily aimed at children ages 5-16, adults who want to act with their children are welcome and in fact, encouraged to join in the fun.

"The workshops will act as a really great tool not only for acting," Henderson said, "but also for overall education. For these kids, acting, or stepping into the shoes of another person will be an eye-opening experience."

"The discoveries I make are amazing," he said. "Inspiration really comes through what the actors are doing, and that's where I get a lot of my ideas. Their imaginations run incredibly wild."

Henderson said his efforts are supplemented by Page and by their public relations person Heidi Mayo. He noted a great deal of hard work went into implementing his new workshops, but Page and Mayo played a big role in making them possible.

But said Henderson, the hard work is a small price to pay for what he is doing right now.

"I'm doing this because I love it," Henderson said, "and that's the bottom line."

For further information on Eric Henderson's Lighthouse Theater call (508) 697-4281.

Eric Henderson and Karin Page hope their new theater venture will become a training ground for young actors. Auditions for the upcoming production of "Alice in Wonderland" are open until Feb. 19.

Brudnoy AT THE MOVIES

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic

Kirk Douglas, Corbin Allred and Dan Aykroyd hit the wild streets of Reno.

Diamonds (D+)

Diamonds start out as coal: "Diamonds" starts out as gloop and remains such throughout. It stars Kirk Douglas, who is partially recovered from a stroke, as Harry Agensky, the erstwhile "Polish Prince" of boxing, who is partially recovering from a stroke. But the movie never ascends to a believable minute nor transcends emotionally overloaded paint-by-the-numbers schmaltz as it tells the story of Harry's voyage with his son and grandson to Reno in ostensible search of a trove of long-buried diamonds.

The journey is awkward for all three, and miserable for people who'll be enticed into seeing it on the screen, featuring Harry out of control at the wheel of a convertible (which, we learn, has a broken top, explaining why, in Canada, the top is always down), Harry overjoyed to encounter an old boxing foe at a motel, Harry tossing a vase through the motel room's mirror, Harry driving his son and grandson nuts. That isn't the half of it.

Harry's son, Lance (Dan Aykroyd, looking miserably unhappy to be stuck in the movie), and his teenage grandson, Michael (Corbin Allred, who is too new at the business to know, perhaps, what a turkey he's in) are at odds. Michael's mother is remarrying and trying to cast her son in with his dad, a fate he doesn't yearn for, though just what he has against dad is never made clear. Still, at moments of anger he's prone to shout things like this to his father, of his soon-to-be stepfather: "He's twice the man you'll ever be!" Nice talk, from the clean-cut-looking kid to his obviously long-suffering father.

The original plan was for a trip to Banff, but since Harry has been babbling for years about diamonds secreted away in a criminal's kitchen in Reno, Lance and Michael decide to humor him by taking him to Nevada. There they gamble and - the film turns really repulsive now - Harry says he'd like a woman before he dies, suggests that Lance could use one, too and poohpoohs Michael's boast that of course he has had one. They head to a brothel, maintained by (oh Lord save us) Lauren Bacall's Sin-Dee, spelled thus. A bold and fetching lass (Jenny McCarthy) takes Virgin Boy under her wing, to mixed effect, while Harry takes four girls for himself and leaves Lance to remaining prostitute. All three of these moments of potential bliss fizzle. And the diamonds thing, we shouldn't forget, eventually plays its part as the movie comes to its predictable ending.

Using a man suffering from a stroke to play a man suffering from a stroke is at once encouraging and dispiriting. Encouraging because it shows the 81-year-old actor's willingness to keep plugging, dispiriting because it isn't, strictly speaking, acting: It's all that Douglas, now, can do. Partially redeeming features of the film are young Allred's puppy-doggish eagerness and gawky charm and the final vignette, which suggests that somebody may experience a happy ending aside from people who'll let this one go to video and cable unseen.

Rear Window (A-)

Why review a 1954 movie now? Fair question. Fair answer is that in a process way too complicated to explain here - five pages are required in the press book to detail it - the original print has been remarkably returned to its glory days, or rather, the negative has (I quote from the press book) been "brought close to its original quality ... we're in the business," the restorer, Robert A. Harris, says, "of snatching great films back from the brink of extinction."

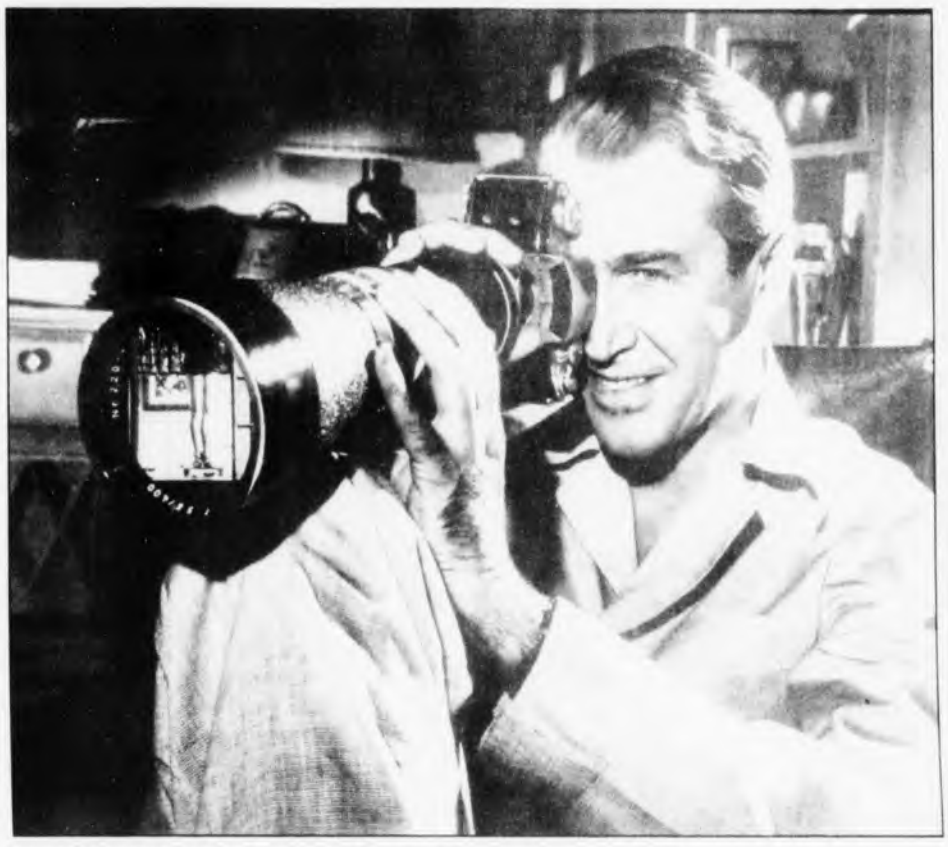
"Great" may be a tad hyperbolic for "Rear Window," but for those who've never seen it, or just seen it on TV or in previous revivals in deteriorating prints, watching this film is a terrific experience, worth taking time out from the "masterpieces" of the moment to savor a classic.

The story tells of a magazine photographer, Jeff Jeffries (James Stewart), who is temporarily confined to a wheelchair following an accident suffered in the line of duty, and of the nastiness he believes he's seeing across the courtyard in his Greenwich Village apartment complex. His girlfriend, Lisa Fremont (a gloriously beautiful Grace Kelly) and his visiting nurse, Stella (Thelma Ritter) begin to take him at his word, as he watches the doings of the neighbor, Lars Thorwald (a pudgy and white-haired Raymond Burr), which brings out the snoop in Jeff and the sense of adventure in the two women.

But Jeff can't convince his pal, policeman Tom Doyle (Wendell Corey), who thinks Jeff has a great imagination and too much time on his hands and is seeing things that aren't, and concocting scenarios that couldn't be. One of the few failings of the film is that the cop gets information at a railroad station that wouldn't, realistically, be available to him at such short notice. These bits of information convince him that what Jeff thinks he's seeing is just a matter of yanking clues out of the air and assembling them into a neat little package.

The film creates suspense without creaky music, guys with masks and machetes, shrieking women tumbling into heaps at our hero's feet, and the other standard accouterments of the scary movies of our day. Alfred Hitchcock's genius here is putting us into Jeff's shoes, so to speak, so that we too feel as if we're confined to that wheelchair and made to construct a case out of tiny bits of information and things that might be nothing at all. The whole movie takes place in Jeff's apartment and within what can be seen from its window, so the sense of claustrophobia is heightened as the film wends its way to its thrilling and in some ways unexpected conclusion. The violence, save for one final scene, is implied rather than shown, and the romance, which is accelerating even as the suspense is building, is likewise alluded to rather than shown. The mores of the '50s are in strict evidence here, so a nightcase with a dressing gown in it stands in for the T&A of our era. "Rear Window" is truly a restored classic for our current delectation.

Written by John Michael Hayes. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Rated PG



Jimmy Stewart enjoys his work until things start going wrong.

New Releases

BOILER ROOM (R) A fast-paced, gritty and rough-edged look at the world of "chop shops," slang for questionable stock trading companies, this one located well outside of Wall Street and regularly bilking its unwary phone clients. Giovanni Ribisi craves attention from his jerk of a father (Ron Rifkin) and tries to prove himself by being a success in the company. Great performances, weird lighting, unpleasant situations. Opens Feb. 18 (E.S.) B

THE CUP (G) Tibetan monastery students in exile in India are obsessed by the World Cup soccer final game and energize themselves to get a TV set to be able to watch it. The senior monk complies. A pleasant small film about trying not to let the desires of the world interfere too much with monkish abnegation. Based on true events. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) B-

DIAMONDS (R) A guy (Dan Aykroyd), his son (Corbin Allfred) and his father (Kirk Douglas), who has suffered a stroke, journey to Reno to recover some gems. They stop at a bordello along the way, one owned by Lauren Bacall. Creepy use of the stroke-affected Douglas, bad jokes, icky bawdiness, schmaltzy emotionality. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) D+

THE EMPEROR AND THE ASSASSIN (R) A Chinese historical epic about the unifier of the country in the 3rd century B.C. Starring Gong Li as his queen and co-conspirator, this features monumental battles, duplicity, fiendish tortures, deviousness and more. Allegedly the most expensive Chinese movie ever made. (D.B.) B+

HANGING UP (PG-13) Insufferably noisy tale of a senile, wretched father (Walter Matthau), the daughter (Meg Ryan) who takes care of him, and her sisters (Diane Keaton and Lisa Kudrow), who don't. Much shrieking and continual telephone conversations till you'll want to scream back at the screen. Emotionally empty. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) D+

MISS JULIE (R) August Strindberg's play concerns a count's daughter (Saffron Burrows) who taunts and seduces Jean (Peter Mullen), the count's footservant. This is a no-no in late-19th Century Sweden. It all takes place in the kitchen, while Jean's fiancee (Maria Doyle Kennedy) is asleep. Stagy but powerfully acted and fitfully faithful to the play. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) B

REAR WINDOW (PG) The terrific 1954 Hitchcock film, reissued in a restored print, features our hero (James Stewart), temporarily wheelchair bound, his nurse (Thelma Ritter) and his girlfriend (Grace Kelly) observing strange goings-on across the courtyard. Raymond Burr is the villain, doing terrible things to his wife, it seems. No obscenities or anything particularly indecorous, but it's sexy just the same. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) A-

THE WHOLE NINE YARDS (R) When a notorious hit-man (Bruce Willis) moves in next door, mild-mannered Montreal dentist Matthew Perry freaks. Featuring Natasha Henstridge, Amanda Peet, Rosanna Arquette and Michael Clarke Duncan, this is hysterical in its early parts, less so later on. The body count isn't too high, but neither, ultimately, are the laughs. Opens Feb. 18. (D.B.) B-

Ongoing

ALL ABOUT MY MOTHER (Unrated) Pedro Almodovar's latest deals with tough women confronting tough circumstances, including the loss of one character's teenage son and the drug addiction of another's lover. It centers on Manuela (Cecilia Roth), who ventures from Madrid to Barcelona to find her dead son's father (now a drag queen). "All About Eve" and "A Streetcar Named Desire" play a part. Impressively acted throughout. (D.B.) B+

ANGELA'S ASHES (R) Derived closely from Frank McCourt's prize-winning memoir, this tells of a bleak childhood in Ireland, seen from the perspective of the protagonist at three stages of his youth. The story is poignant and the acting, by Emily Watson and Robert Carlyle as the parents, and by the three boys, is splendid. (D.B.) B+

ANY GIVEN SUNDAY (R) Oliver Stone's meditation on football and on valor and knowing when it's time to pack it in. With an incessant rap score that may drive some people away, and starring Al Pacino as the coach of a Miami team, the movie is relentless in both its depiction of the game and its hammering home of the themes. Overlong, intense. (D.B.) B

THE BEACH (R) Paradise found, and lost, as Leonardo DiCaprio ventures into Thailand, learns about a wonderful hidden island with its glorious beach, and goes there. He finds a community, self-sufficient, almost, and he finds sex, or love, or something, and obviously someone to do his hair. This has its cinematic virtues, but its story is trite and the hackneyed quality undermines it. (D.B.) C

Changing travel plans

George Hobica

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I recently bought a round-trip from Key West to Miami on Continental. On the return flight, on Jan. 18, 2000, I needed to change my travel plans and wanted to know if I could standby for a later flight on the same day without penalty.

I called the airline the night before and was told that I could fly standby on a later flight on the same day without penalty. My original flight was scheduled to leave Key West for Miami at 10:15 a.m. I decided to take the next flight to Miami at 12.50 p.m., and got to the airport around 11:55 a.m., or one hour and 40 minutes after my original flight was supposed to leave.

When I checked in, the woman at the check-in counter demanded that I pay $75 because I missed my flight. She said that I could go standby on a flight scheduled to depart earlier than my original flight without penalty but not a flight scheduled to depart after my original flight. She was very rude and unfriendly.

I told her what the Continental representative told me the night before, and she said, "Whoever I talked to is wrong." Having no choice, I paid the $75, but think I was mistreated. What is Continental's policy, and if I paid the penalty in error, how do I get it back?

A. The gate agent at Key West was wrong. Continental passengers can standby for an earlier flight on the same day or for a later flight if they check in within two hours of the original flight, which you did, even though you weren't told to do so when you called originally. Most other airlines also allow standby travel on the same day without penalty.

Send a copy of your ticket, boarding passes and receipt for the $75 penalty with a request for a refund to: Continental Airlines Customer Refund Service, P.O. Box 3046, Dept. HQJRF Houston TX 77253.

Q. We'll be visiting Chicago soon and would like to see the major tourist attractions. Is there an all-in-one visitor pass like Paris has allowing you admission to all the museums and attractions like the zoo for a set price?

A. Not yet, but there soon will be. The Chicago CityPass goes on sale May 4, and offers admission to the Art Institute of Chicago, the Field Museum, the Museum of Science and Industry, Adler Planetarium and Astronomy Museum, Shedd Aquarium and the Sears Tower Sky Deck.

The booklet also includes savings certificate from Marshall Field's. CityPass costs $49.25 for adults, and $39 for children 3 to 11, and offers savings of about 50 percent vs. separate admissions. The Lincoln Park Zoo isn't part of the deal, but it's free anyway. CityPass is also available for Hollywood (Calif.), New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Seattle and San Francisco (starting April 1, the San Francisco pass includes unlimited rides on the city's public transportation).

CityPass is available for sale at participating attractions, or for more information and to purchase tickets, go to www.citypass.net or call (707) 256-0490.

Q. I need to find a hotel near New York's JFK Airport. Can you provide some suggestions?

A. Here are the best possibilities. It's best to call the hotel directly rather than the central reservation number to get the best deals:

Hilton JFK Airport, (718) 322-8700; Pan American Hotel, (718) 446-7676; Four Points Sheraton, (718) 489-1000; Holiday Inn JFK Airport, (718) 659-0200; Radisson Hotel JFK Airport, (212) 322-2300; Ramada Plaza Hotel, (718) 995-9000.

Q. I'll be visiting New York City soon and have some questions. I'll be flying into Newark, and wonder what the best way to get into Manhattan might be.

Also, where can I find information about the transit system? Is there a Web site?

A. The easiest and cheapest way to get into Manhattan is by Olympia Trails. Buses leave the arrival area every five to 10 minutes. Stops include Grand Central Station (41st Street at Lexington Avenue), Port Authority Bus Terminal (42nd Street at Eighth Avenue), Penn Station (34th Street and Eighth Avenue).

World Trade Center 1 (on West Street between Vesey and Liberty Streets) and all Midtown points between 30th Street and 65th Street via a connecting hotel shuttle.

Fares are $11 each way, half that for seniors. Call (888) 622-7700 or visit www.olympiabus.com for more information.

The New York City Transit Web site is at www.mta.nyc.ny.us where you'll find information about maps, schedules and Metrocard passes.

For tourists, the Fun Pass is a good deal: It gives you a day of unlimited subway and local bus rides for $4 vs. the single ride price of $1.50.

Hingham native is hit in Italy parody of the Gap "Swing" commercial. Carr sings "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree," in the spoof — a song she recorded on her first CD "Carr-tunes." Carr's debut CD quickly caught the attention of an Italian promoter who signed her for the 1998 Eurojazz festival. It was during this festival that Carr fell in love with Italy and met the musicians who would eventually accompany her during her San Giorgio performance. But her first tour abroad didn't go without a hitch, Carr recalls.

"My first trip to Italy in 1998 my piano player became incredibly ill and left the day we got there. I had no charts [music sheets] and I had six performances in that one week. I didn't know the language, I was jet-lagged and completely freaked out," said Carr. Fortunately, the promoter introduced her to Luigi Martinale who worked with her and introduced her to the rest of the trio.

"We had such a wonderful week together, that's why I returned to Italy this year, to work with them," said Carr.

The CD contains many old favorites such as "They can't take that away," but also includes some original songs which Carr and Martinale collaborated on.

"I wanted to stick with the American standards they could grasp quickly and that didn't need a lot of rehearsal," said Carr. "It was really under the gun and in a way I like the way the songs came out because they weren't belabored upon. We were able to say okay, what's you first interpretation of this music and how can we make this work' without reworking, reworking, reworking," she said.

Original work on the CD includes Martinale's "Sweet Marta," and Carr's "Take Your Time," — songs that come straight from the heart of these performers. "Sweet Marta," is about Martinale's niece and "Take Your Time," was written by Carr about a friend back home who was having relationship problems.

Although this is Carr's second CD, she's been in the business for over 20 years. Carr's been singing since she was a young girl but only recently came to the jazz genre.

Music and jazz in particular, is clearly in Carr's blood.

"My mother is a singer, she still sings. She's a big band singer and my father was a jazz trumpet player. I kind of grew up with it. With me it just took a lot of years before I really started listening to the depths of the genre. I was 30 years old and I had just come back from LA and my mother asked me to fill in on some gigs for her. I really was kind of re-introduced to the genre. I had a new sense for it and a new appreciation for it," she said.

Currently, Carr is working on a collection she began several years ago. She has begun work with a guitar player on songs she wrote in memory of her late fiancé who died in the Reba McIntyre plane crash in 1991. She expects to wrap up work on it and release the new album within the next two years.

To find out where Carr is performing next, call 1-888-340-MUSIC. Her CD can be purchased at Borders Books and Music in Braintree, Tower Records in Boston, Burlington and Cambridge or by visiting her website at www.originalmusic.com. All the proceeds from her first CD, "Carr-tunes," and a portion of the proceeds from her second CD, "Live In San Giorgio," will benefit the Standish Humane Society.

SPED deficit reaches $180K

Money will likely come from school budget

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A $180,000 special education deficit was announced last Thursday night by Superintendent Edward Malvey, an amount which came as a shock to school committee members.

The total special education deficit for the 1999-2000 school year has now reached $380,000. Town meeting approved $200,000 to cover the special education deficit at last December's special town meeting with the understanding an additional $23,000 would be sought at the Mar. 25 annual town meeting. The amount needed to be funded has now increased by $157,000.

"In the $9 million school department budget, they're going to have to find $150,000."
Town Manager Mark Haddad

While the $23,000 special education deficit will be covered at town meeting, Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town will not be able to use free cash to fund the rest of the special education deficit as it did at last December's special town meeting.

"The town can't help them out this time," Haddad said of the school department. "We only have $144,000 in free cash, and we need $70,000 of that for police overtime and $50,000 for our legal budget because of litigation with Cohasset Heights Landfill. We have to fund those. In the $9 million school department budget, they're going to have to find $150,000."

Town officials didn't learn about the $157,000 increase in the special education deficit until last Thursday, according to Town Accountant Michael Buckley, who said the changing nature of special education costs makes budgeting extremely difficult.

"I don't know what we're going to do," Buckley said on Monday. "Finding out this late makes it very hard to plan. I think we have to look at the school budget first and see what's there."

Haddad said it is important to keep boards appraised of likely deficits, in order to make budgetary plans accordingly.

"We've been warning selectmen of the police overtime problem right along and about the legal budget as well," he said. "We keep the board

Middle-high school plans are unveiled by committee

Five-phase project could be done by summer of 2004

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Two new second-floor gymnasiums, a new second-floor cafeteria, and added classrooms for the sixth grade highlighted plans for a renovated middle-high school which were presented by architect Gene Raymond at Tuesday night's meeting of the school facilities committee.

Raymond, of the Hingham firm Strekalovsky and Hoit, said the middle-high school project could be constructed in five phases and completed by the summer of 2004.

The school facilities committee was to meet Wednesday after press time to approve the proposed footprints of both Deer Hill and the middle-high school in order to meet the March 1 deadline when preliminary schematic drawings and educational specifications for the schools must be submitted to the state.

"Clearly, some of these things will have an effect on the operational budget. We hope to have those numbers before town meeting."
School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

While the footprints of the schools had yet to be approved Tuesday night, school administrators seemed pleased with the proposed uses for the new schools.

"We think the plans are superb," said middle-high school principal Curtis Collins.

Under the plan unveiled by Raymond on Tuesday night, the Sullivan Gym in the high school is to be demolished, while the middle school's Dorr Gym will be converted into music rooms. In their place, two new gyms will be constructed on the second floor of a new addition. The gyms will be next to each other, but the middle school gym will be accessible from the middle school wing, creating separateness between high school and middle school students.

Next to the gyms will be the renovated, expanded cafeteria, which will be large enough to meet the needs of increased enrollment and could be entered from both the middle school and high school wings. Collins said the cafeteria had to be larger or scheduling conflicts would ensue.

Prescription for disaster

Price difference in meds for pets and humans

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It's much cheaper to be as sick as a dog.

That's the finding of a new study released Tuesday by U.S. Rep. William Delahunt comparing the costs of prescription medication for humans and animals. He says the end result shows prescription drug "price discrimination" is an urgent problem which continues to escalate.

The 24-page study is the South Shore Democrat's third on the cost of prescription medications for local consumers.

"For medicines approved for use by both people and animals, adjusted for dosage, the average price differential was found to exceed 100 percent," Delahunt said, noting the leading offender — an asthma drug called Medrol sold wholesale for 415 percent higher for people than their pets.

"I'm all for healthy pets, but not at the financial and medical expense of their owners."
— US Rep. William Delahunt

"For prescription drugs approved and dispensed in identical dosage and form for both humans and animals, and manufactured by the same company, the average price differential was even greater," said Delahunt. "Common prescription drugs cost far less in Southeastern Massachusetts when they are prescribed for animal use."

For instance, the study indicates a drug called "Augmentin" sells for approximately $56 per month for a "human" prescription. The study shows a medicine called "Clavamox" to be the exact same drug, but Clavamox is the animal-oriented version of the medication and its monthly prescription cost is only $18.

The skyrocketing costs for prescriptions comes as no surprise to health care providers who work closely with senior citizens — the population most heavily reliant on medications.

Meg Doherty, executive director of the Norwell/Scituate VNA and a nurse practitioner on the South Shore, said senior citizens are indeed the ones who are affected most by the high prices of prescription drugs.

"That's where the main problems are," Doherty said, "and those are the choices seniors are faced with."

Doherty said she has seen numer-

Senior housing

The senior housing committee will meet at 9 a.m., Wed., March 1, at Town Hall. The committee, which still needs a full-time secretary, is planning to look at build-out maps at the meeting, among other business.

Absentee ballots for presidential primary

Absentee ballots for the Presidential Primary, March 7, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime Monday, March 6, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

Absence from the town during the hours the polls are open, physical disability, and religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, by fax or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, which ballot is requested, Democrat, Republican or Libertarian, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant. A voter must vote in the party he is enrolled in. However, if a voter is Unenrolled (Independent), he may choose his ballot. In a presidential primary only, the voter becomes enrolled in and shall remain a member of the political party whose ballot he received, until he files a certificate to have his enrollment changed to another party. A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by March 7 to be counted.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Recycle oil filters, antifreeze, batteries

Used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries can be recycled by bringing them to the Cohasset Recycling Transfer Facility on Cedar Street..

"We have been successful in providing for the recycling of used oil filters, antifreeze and batteries by Cohasset residents," said Recycling Committee chairman Arthur Lehr. "We urge everyone to separate and recycle these items rather than throw them away."

In addition to these materials, Cohasset residents may also bring the following to the RTF for recycling: newspapers, white paper, junk mail, plastic bottles, aluminum, steel, cardboard, glass (separate by color), and cans (which should be cleaned out). Paint is accepted, but only on designated days. A fee is required for dropping off: tires, household appliances, household furniture and other miscellaneous bulky materials.

Red Lion Inn complex continues to roar ahead

To open in April

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The Red Lion Inn is awakening from its hibernation.

Construction workers have been a fixture of life in Cohasset Village in recent months, busily renovating the historic inn and transforming the former Lilac House into a bistro bar, bakery, and retail shop.

The exterior of the buildings are beginning to show the fruits of such labor, as new red cedar clapboards with white trim have been unveiled at the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House. The Red Lion Inn and Lilac House are scheduled to open within two months.

"We're going to be opening both the Red Lion Inn and Lilac House in April," said Red Lion manager Gus Long.

Ground has been broken on the newest part of the Red Lion complex, a new function barn behind the inn. Excavation work is underway on the post and beam structure, whose second floor is planned to connect to the inn by a covered bridge.

With only about two months before its opening, the Red Lion is in the process of recruiting employees. A 'Now Hiring' sign on the Red Lion Inn can be seen from South Main Street and the Red Lion held a job fair on Feb. 13.

Long said about 70 prospective employees attended the job fair and said another one is scheduled for the weekend of Mar. 11-12.

"The only thing that won't be ready by April is the barn," Long said. "We're laying the foundation for it now."

Owner Gerde Ordelheide has said the new building will house functions for up to 150 people as well as act as a lounge area for guests of the inn.

Guests of the inn will also be able to enjoy a spa, jazz, club, and wine cellar located beneath the restaurant. Because the club will be located below grade and within concrete walls, the zoning board of appeals foresaw no noise problem and granted a special permit to the Red Lion for live entertainment in the jazz club, with one stipulation. Music in the club must cease by midnight unless it can be demonstrated to zoning officer Bob Egan that no sound can be heard at the lot line.

Though the ZBA placed a condition on live entertainment at the planned jazz club, its main concern with the Red Lion renovation was parking. ZBA chairman Woody Chittick said the overall project is likely to benefit the village once parking problems are alleviated.

"The board feels the Red Lion will be an enhancement to the downtown. The parking situation is a town issue, and is due to more than the Red Lion Inn, which exacerbates the problem rather than creating it."
— Woody Chittick, ZBA chairman

"The board feels the Red Lion will be an enhancement to the downtown," Chittick said. "The parking situation is a town issue, and is due to more than the Red Lion Inn, which exacerbates the problem rather than creating it."

A 22-space parking lot is planned behind the Lilac House, adjacent to the function barn. Engineer Neil Murphy, representing Ordelheide, said the lot would be sufficient for all guests who stay at the inn.

When the inn, restaurant, and function rooms are filled to capacity, Ordelheide estimated 400 guests would need parking, along with about 60 employees. Even if the Red Lion inn were full, those guests and employees would likely take up half of the town parking lot.

The back hoe is building the foundation that will host special functions at the Red Lion Inn.

Though Ordelheide said most functions would be on nights and weekends when bus commuters do not use the municipal lot, ZBA members put in a condition which minimizes the effect the Red Lion could have on downtown parking.

Ordelheide will be required to provide off-street employee parking in an area other than the town lot. For guest parking, the Red Lion plans to do valet parking to its own spaces first, and then to the town lot and legal public spots once the Red Lion is full.

The only other conditions placed on the Red Lion Inn by the ZBA were designed to make the Red Lion parking area as unobtrusive as possible to area residents. A six-foot fence and non-deciduous shrubbery will be required to shield abutters from the glare of headlights in the Red Lion parking lot and lighting in the lot must be kept to the minimum height and intensity necessary for vehicular and passenger safety.

No conditions were placed on proposed outdoor activities behind the Red Lion. The back of the Red Lion Inn is to feature an outdoor eating area, from which those dining will be able to see guests swimming in the 18' x 38' open pool.

Those planning a function at the Lilac House or new barn can choose between menus ranging from $35 to $75 per person, or build their own customized menu.

"There are a few different ways people can choose their menu," executive chef Brendan Noble said when discussing the Red Lion's planned menu in November. "The preset menus get more sophisticated as you go along, so the entrees on the $35 menu might be salmon or chicken, while the $75 menu would feature lobster.

"People can also plan their own menu, and can choose added features like a raw oyster bar or a caviar station. People can really let it all hang out."

The menu at The Lion's Den will be a definite departure from the function menu, as Noble sought to achieve simplicity in the food at the bar.

"We wanted the bar food to be scaled down," he said. "We'll have items like eight-ounce burgers, dim sum, grilled tuna sandwiches, and club sandwiches. We want people to be able to pick the food up with their hands, for the most part."

Les Roches will feature a more extensive menu than The Lion's Den in an atmosphere which Noble described as sophisticated. He said he tried to incorporate traditional favorites with a bit of added flair.

"We have braised pork ribs on the menu, for instance," he said. "I thought ribs would be great for the menu, but I couldn't just make some baby back ribs and serve them with barbecue sauce. I had to think of a different way to do it. So we put a bunch of Asian spices in and slow roast the ribs, so they literally pop right off the bone."

Other main course items include a veal t-bone and venison, as well as seafood, beef, and chicken dishes. Noble said the menu will vary with the seasons.

"The menu will change with what's available and what's good," he said. "We want to keep the restaurant in tune with what's going on outside its walls."

Ordelheide said he also wants to ensure that the restaurant becomes a familiar gathering place for residents in town.

"We're keeping the price level down ($14-24 for entrees) because I don't want it to be fancy," he said last November. "I don't want any barriers between the rich people in town and the fishermen who have been here for years. I want everyone to come. In the winter, I'd like to have an outdoor Christmas market. I want it to be part of life in the village."

AROUND TOWN

NEW ARRIVALS

We start the week with wonderful news — two brand new babies to tell you about! In order of appearance they are:

Lena Frances Durkin, who is the daughter of Jean and Brian Durkin, who was born Jan. 21 at 4:10 p.m. at South Shore Hospital. Lena weighed 8 pounds 4 ounces and was 21 inches long. Her maternal grandmother, Frances Lofy, lives in Hyde Park, Mass. Her paternal grandparents (known to everyone in Cohasset) are Rita and John Durkin, and live in Scituate. (I wonder how many grandchildren they have now? Imagine Easter at their house with all of the bunnies running around?)

We all welcome you, Lena!

Sean Joseph Reichardt arrived Jan. 26 at 3:21 p.m. and was everybody happy! Sean weighed 7 pounds 6 ounces and was 22 inches long — he joins his brother James (age 9) and his sister Suzanne (age 5), who are both very proud of him.. and eager to help, we are sure!

Sean's grandparents are Fred and Joan Prezioso of Quincy and Kathleen Reichardt of Hull. We will bet that he will get more kisses and hugs than anyone can believe possible!

Congratulations to all of you, especially Mom and Dad, Linda and Jim Reichardt! You certainly will be a busy pair!

HONOR ROLL

Following the second term of classes Fork Union Military Academy has named from Cohasset Cadet Brian Hurley to the Honor Roll. Cadet Hurley received the second highest academic honor at the academy by being placed on this list!

Congrats go out to you, Brian!

TOP WRESTLER

Everyone in town remembers John Paul Laugelle! He was so good in football and excellent in wrestling, also! A 1999 graduate from Cohasset High School, he has really made a name for himself — he is number one in the heavyweight division right now, and heads to Pennsylvania to compete.

We are all cheering for you, John Paul, and for all of your fellow wrestlers at New Hampton — we know you can be the best (you already are!). Best of luck, just do what you always do, you are the best!

RELAY FOR LIFE

Here is a spot for you to mark on your calendar right now! June 9 and 10 at Alumni Field is the place to be — that's when the Relay For Life will take place. Buy your new sneakers now (break them in), then be prepared to walk/run to make money to combat cancer! Then be happy you helped find the cure!

MEDICAL FUND

Please don't forget the Alan DeVito Family Fund — DONATE to the medical fund. The DeVito family would really appreciate your help; just run to the Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank with your check!

LITTLE LEAGUE

Attention all of you Little League watchers/members — the board of directors ask for a little financial support! The Little League motto contains the words "loyalty, courage, character," and that is what we all need in life! They are seeking funds to improve (although we think they are the best) and have done such a wonderful job on the field and the teams. If you would like to see it even better, then mail a check to Cohasset Youth Baseball Association at Box # 121, Cohasset. Help maintain and improve Barnes Field and the rest of the fields used by our boys and girls! There are approximately 500 baseball and softball players who will benefit!

HASTY PUDDING

Jamie Lee Curtis poses with Cohasset's Anthony Ambrose and Kristie Henriksen at Ambrosia's restaurant in Boston after a pre-Hasty Pudding award luncheon. Curtis was honored as "Woman of the Year" by the Hasty Pudding Theatricals at Harvard, the nation's oldest dramatic organization.

SUPER YOUNG WOMAN

Another sad event was the passing of Rosemarie Kierce, who passed away at the age of 20. She was dearly loved by so many people (a super girl) and she will be missed by all of us! We are saddened by her passing!

A SPECIAL MAN

We were very sad to learn of the passing of Bill O'Brien — remember what a fine man he was? Whenever anybody (be it child or adult) needed anything, Bill was there! We think of Little League, we think of all sports at Cohasset High, we think of his wonderful children and of all the good things he did!

Our hearts go out to his family!

That is the news; hopefully you will call me or mail me with yours — we all need to hear about your big events!

Dying with dignity

Hospice care allows terminally ill to enjoy their last days

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Instead of lying in a hospital bed, a dying Scituate man with a love for the ocean was able to spend some of his final days visiting waterfront sites in the South Shore and Cape Cod.

The man was able to feel the ocean breeze against his skin one last time because of services furnished by the Hospice of the South Shore, a non-profit program of South Shore Hospital which provides home and hospice care to patients in Southeastern Massachusetts.

The hospice provides services which allow terminally ill patients to be home with their families. It provides home medical care from full-time employees as well as visits from skilled volunteers, who spend time with patients and allow family members to gain a respite from the painful reality of caring for a dying relative.

The hospice also provides chaplains to visit with patients and provides bereavement services to help both adult family members and children to deal with the loss of a loved one. Social workers also advise families on insurance questions.

Fifteen-year hospice volunteer Bud Watts of Hingham has seen firsthand the benefits which hospice care provides to terminally ill patients and their families.

One of Watts' patients was the Scituate man who loved the ocean. Watts would pick the man up and take him to places such as the Cape Cod Canal or Marina Bay in Quincy. While most of the terminally ill patients served by hospice care pass away within a couple of months, Watts' ocean-loving patient lasted nearly a year.

The patient's wife told Watts she believed the waterfront visits gave him the strength and motivation to fight his terminal disease.

"She told me he lasted so long because the trips to the ocean thrilled him so much," Watts said. "It's so much better for the patient and caregiver to have hospice services available."

"In most circumstances, having someone at home for the dying process is optimal."

Mary Whitley, Cohasset representative to the Walk for Hospice

When dealing with the painful reality of a terminal disease, the emotion of the situation can make it difficult for families to cope without guidance from a staff trained to help people through such circumstances.

"Death is such a painful experience for everyone involved," said Linda Bliss, public relations coordinator for the Walk for Hospice, which raises funds to provide hospice services, some of which Bliss said are only partially covered by insurance or aren't covered at all. "Hospice services make the experience a little easier."

The ninth-annual Walk for Hospice will take place at the South Shore Plaza in Braintree on Saturday, March 4 from 7 to 10 a.m. Mary Whitley, 160 Fair Oaks Lane, an oncology nurse for 15 years, is the Cohasset representative for the Walk for Hospice. She said her experience with cancer patients has shown her the need for terminally ill patients to be home with family members.

"In most circumstances, having someone at home for the dying process is optimal," Whitley said. "Most of the medical problems can be dealt with in the home and the volunteers can give the families some time off."

Whitley learned about hospice care through her work at Beth Israel hospital and with the Norwell Visiting Nurses Association. In her role as Cohasset's representative to the Walk for Hospice, Whitley has put up posters and pledge sheets for the event and is working to coordinate teams of walkers.

"I'm hoping to get teams of walkers from the high school and from churches in town," she said.

While getting pledges and finishing a certain amount of laps are important, Bliss said the Walk for Hospice is about more than simply walking back and forth inside South Shore Plaza.

"There's a very emotional side to the event," she said. "People who have been touched by hospice can share their experiences with each other. We also have a memorial wall where people can put personal momentos and cards for friends or loved ones who have passed away."

Watts, in his 15th year as a hospice volunteer, has walked 10 miles at each previous Walk for Hospice. He said he looks forward to the event each year.

"You have to be there to believe the good spirit it engenders," Watts said of the event. "Family and friends of those who have died walk in memory of them. There are so many people whose lives have been touched by hospice care. It's really a celebration."

Watts said being a hospice volunteer is often difficult, but said he is rewarded by knowing he made a patient's final days a little bit better.

"I don't know anyone who likes to see people facing the end of their lives, but, at the same time, so many of the patients are wonderful people," he said. "After spending time with them, I end up wishing I had known a lot of them when they were well."

Watts said volunteers do a great deal for patients to soften the devastating blow of a terminal diagnosis.

"A lot of people just want company, someone to talk to," he said. "I had one patient who loved to read but couldn't see well enough anymore, so I read him some books he had always wanted to read. For another patient, I shared pictures my wife and I had taken of different places we'd been. On one visit, we'd go to Hawaii, and on the next visit we'd go to Switzerland. He knew he wasn't going to get to see those places himself, so we sort of went together."

The annual Walk for Hospice event has done a great deal to publicize hospice care in the south shore, but Watts said some patients don't find out the services are available until it's nearly too late.

"Before the walk started, the general public knew very little about hospice," he said. "The publicity has grown, but a lot of people are still poorly informed. After families experience the care we give, they often say 'Why didn't we get our patient into this program sooner?' We want to let people know these services exist."

Pledge sheets for the Walk for Hospice are available in Cohasset at Buttonwoods Books and Toys, Atlantic Bagel and Deli, the South Shore Community Center, and many small restaurants in town. For more information about the event, contact Carole Sheehan at (781) 340-8848.

Mary Whitley is the Cohasset representative for the Walk for Hospice on March 4 at South Shore Plaza.

Story of Noah

On Sunday, March 5, at 2 p.m., the weather will turn frightful as The Jubilate Choir of St. Stephen's Church performs "100% Chance of Rain." Originally performed in 1972 by the Choristers Guild of Texas, "100% Chance of Rain" is the story of Noah's struggles and triumphs. Through song and dialogue, the story of the great flood unfolds. With rousing musical numbers such as "Gonna Build an Ark" and "The Admirable Admiral," Noah and his family build the Ark and survive the flood. The beautiful ballad "At the Sign of the Rainbow" fulfills God's promise and tells us we are all part of God's Rainbow. Music directors are Fred Guzasky and Linda DeRosa-Coakley.

A free-will offering will be taken, and the children will determine which organization will be the recipient.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For more information, call the church office at 383-1083.

Wintertime introspection

Tucked away in his humble cabin on the banks of Walden Pond, Thoreau took the time to stop to smell the roses — and to record his thoughts on the passing of seasons around him. Like many people these days, Thoreau did a lot of his work at home, making regular perambulations of the area but avoiding that tough commute along Route 2. He would go for his walk, then return to the cabin to work on his writing, something loosely akin to today's telecommuters.

"In winter we lead a more inward life. Our hearts are warm and cheery, like cottages under drifts, whose windows and doors are half concealed, but from whose chimneys the smoke cheerfully ascends...."

— H.D. Thoreau
"A Winter Walk," 1843

He was on target in his observation that wintertime generally leads us to more introspection, more time at home, physically and mentally battened down for the season.

This winter was a long time coming, with the first snowfall blowing in well after the new year. The Old Farmer's Almanac predicted that New England would see a mild start to the season, with persistent cold air and record-low temperatures in January. The Almanac said we would see a February with slightly above-normal temperature and precipitation, with a Nor'easter cranking through during the second week. The Almanac tends to be more reliable with its peach cobbler recipes and advice for when to plant your vegetables, but so far this winter the prognostications have been fairly accurate.

Now that Groundhog Day has come and gone, followed by Valentine's Day, and Lincoln's (Feb. 12) and Washington's (Feb. 22) birthdays, which round out this chilly core month of winter, we can begin to talk about spring.

Before you know it, we can start to look at the world, and the change of seasons, in the way that that old scribe Thoreau viewed his environs, and wrote in "Walden":

"I am on alert for the first signs of spring, to hear the chance note of some arriving bird, or the striped squirrel's chirp, for his stores must be now nearly exhausted, or see the woodchuck venture out of his winter quarters."

State Democratic Committee candidate

Craig Hall, 33, of Weymouth, has announced he is a candidate for the Plymouth and Norfolk Democratic State Committee seat which includes Cohasset and Hingham. The date this year is Tuesday, March 7.

Craig Hall is 33 years old, married and a homeowner on the South Shore. Craig was raised in a middle-class blue-collar family, attended Weymouth Public Schools, was the first in his family to earn a college degree (a bachelor of science from Bridgewater State College) and later a master's degree in public administration from the Sawyer School of Management at Suffolk University. Hall is an elected member of the Weymouth Democratic Town Committee. Hall was appointed by then Democratic State Party Chairman, Steve Grossman, to the DSC's Public Policy Committee, then chaired by Phil Johnston of Marshfield. Hall has been elected to State Conventions and in 1992 was elected an Alternate to the National Convention in New York.

Hall was an elected Town Meeting Member in Weymouth and the former chairman of the Town's Bylaw Review Committee. Craig served as president of one of Weymouth's largest neighborhood associations and co-founded the Leadership Council — a town-wide council of Weymouth's neighborhood presidents. Craig was a co-founder of the Sons of the American Legion for American Legion Post 79 (Weymouth) and the Weymouth Lion's Club, as well as being involved in many other civic activities.

SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It seems so natural, so fair, so right. Each of us pays only for as much as we use, for as little as we use. Each of us pays according to our individual habits. This is so American. This is individual freedom in action. Not a generalized "tax" unfairly levied, with some people paying for others. This way we would pay as we go, pay only according to what we use, not having to pay for the other guy who uses, or wastes, more than I do, more than we do in our family. And we're doing this not only as a fair, equitable application of individual use, but in the larger sense we're, each of us, doing our bit, our share, to help the needy environment.

Naturally, and for good reason, we Americans don't life unfairness. It's part of our blood. Like rising oil/gas/fuel prices, we suspect there's something going on there. We have the reputation of being hard workers. We want to have something to show for our work. With this kind of national origin, the way we've been handling our waste situation has not been financially fair. We've been paying a flat fee, which encourages slippage and cheating.

The more I think about this, the more heated I get. It's not just out-of-town people getting hold of those second RTF stickers allotted per family. It's not just selfish people who take advantage of the transfer station, knowingly, and slip the wrong things into the big demolition dumpster, or those other instances of grossness. It's the one-by-one, family, or individual unfairness that happens when we're not personally accountable for our own lifestyles. By managing my waste, I'm going to feel better about my stay on this earth.

This week's column was inspired largely by the fact that Save-As-You-Throw is on the warrant for the March 25 town meeting as truly a citizen petition. See you next time.

Allan MacDonald is publicity chairman for Cohasset Recycling Committee.

First Parish renovations grow more complex

Church trying to avoid a quick fix to structural problems

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Like school committee members who have argued for an overhaul of town schools, members of the First Parish congregation want to avoid a Band-Aid approach in fixing the old church.

Originally, a new paint job was the cure prescribed for the ills of the 253 year-old church, but further investigation showed the building's problems could not be corrected with cosmetic changes.

"You could see from the street that the paint was peeling," said Rod Hobson, who is serving as clerk-of-the-works on the First Parish restoration project. "After taking a look, we could see more work needed to be done. There are eight wooden legs which hold up the steeple, and four of them were completely rotted out."

Hobson said he is unsure when the steeple would be replaced, but said it should be a couple of weeks, at the least.

The steeple was removed last month to allow the structural problems to be fixed. Hobson said he found more than he bargained for upon its removal.

"It's kind of like the Big Dig, we keep finding new things to fix," Hobson said. "When we removed the steeple, we found the bell tower roof needed work done. A lot more work needed to be done than we first thought."

The current steeple dates back to 1869, when the original steeple had to be rebuilt after a violent lightning strike. Hobson said he hopes another century passes before the steeple and roof need to be repaired again.

"We're trying to do this so it won't need to be done for another 150 years," he said. "There have only been patchwork repairs in the past, and the steeple and bell tower roof are finally in need of a total restoration."

Hobson said removing the steeple has allowed workers to complete a first-class repair of the bell tower roof and the eight wooden posts holding up the steeple. Those posts have been reinstalled, and could be seen from the street Tuesday afternoon when driving by the steepleless church.

In addition to the work on the roof and wooden posts, the church's spire has been completely re-sheathed in mahogany and the finial, the big ball on top of the steeple, has been repaired as well.

The letters on the church weathervane have also been re-gilded in gold. Hobson said the cost of the renovations is far greater than First Parish members had originally budgeted for.

"We're looking at over $60,000," Hobson said. "It's been very expensive. We've had a lot of unexpected expenses because there were more problems than we thought."

Hobson said the members of the church will be looking to pay for the renovations, though he wasn't sure what type of fundraisers would be organized.

Steeped in history

Though the First Parish steeple has been removed to repair rotted-out woodwork, the current renovation is not the first time the steeple has undergone significant changes.

The steeple was built in the 1799 and remained unchanged until lightning struck the church twice in a period of 17 years, first in 1852 and again in 1869. The second lightning strike was particularly devastating.

"The lightning shattered the whole steeple," said Town Archivist David Wadsworth. "Everything above the clock was knocked completely apart."

Wadsworth said significant damage was barely avoided much more recently, while First Parish was undergoing a restoration in 1986. While structures necessary for construction sat next to the church, a violent storm threatened to leave devastation in its wake.

"We got hit with a hurricane while the scaffolding was up," Wadsworth said. "The whole thing was swaying back and forth and I thought it might all come down."

First Parish survived the storm, remaining where it has now stood for over 250 years. The current church is actually the second incarnation of First Parish, first built in 1714 at a site just south of the present building.

The first church was dismantled in 1747, when the congregation outgrew the building and the current church was built. Wadsworth said the first legacy of the town's first church still survives, however.

"The timbers from the first church were used in building some of the houses around the common," he said.

Historical commission member Noel Ripley said the location of the first church forever changed the future of the town.

"King Street was originally going to be the main street in town," Ripley said. "Because town meetings and other public business was conducted at First Parish, the common became the center of town."

Built in 1747, the current First Parish church was home to town meetings and other public events until 1824, when second Congregational Church was built as a result of a schism in the First Parish congregation.

"I like to tell the children that the original people who went to this church weren't Americans, they were English subjects," said Rod Hobson, clerk-of-the-works on the current renovation project.

The first child christened in the current First Parish church was Francis James of Cohasset, who was born in 1849. His father, a carpenter, helped to build the meeting house. His status as the first child christened at the church boded well for his longevity, as he lived to age 92.

If First Parish's walls could talk, they could spawn tales of the beginnings of the town and the country itself. In addition to the early town meetings it has seen, First Parish also played a small part in the Revolutionary War.

A view of First Parish after a lightning strike in 1869.

"At the time of the Revolutionary War, the town's leaders built a secret room in First Parish to store the town's ammunition," Wadsworth said. "To me, it's easily the most historic building in town."

Only in the Bay State

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

For the life of me I don't see what all the fuss is about the Big Dig.

Accusations of cost overruns . . . charges of "lack of due diligence" . . . hints of "deliberate deceit and deception?"

Don't they know that's the way it has always been done in Massachusetts?

Remember McKee, Berger and Mansueto, the New York consulting firm that was involved in construction of UMass-Boston some 30 years ago?

When the dust had settled after that one, two state senators went to jail.

If I recall right, someone also served a jail term when the cost of the garage under Boston Common was finally totaled up.

It seems to go with the territory here in our home state.

So far no one has gone to jail in the Big Dig — or the "Big Pig," as it's come to be known to some newspaper readers — but the Feds have promised they'll take a good look at the possibility.

The Feds are involved because their Department of Transportation is putting up some of the funds for the project and they have had experience with the way things are done in the Bay State.

A professor at Brandeis told me not long ago that whenever he applied for a federal grant he included a little something extra for the state employee who came around once a month to see how the project was going.

The latest brouhaha over the Central Artery/Harbor Tunnel project, as the Big Dig is formally known, burst upon us when management filed its annual report on cost estimates.

That was Feb. 1 and the figure was $10.8 billion — but wait. The next day, Jim Kerasiotes, the chief digger, let slip that the cost would really be $12.2 billion, a cost overrun of $1.4 billion.

Ordinarily, this would not bother official Washington where a senator once remarked, "A million here and a million there and pretty soon you're talking real money!"

But this time it attracted the attention of US Congressman Frank Wolf, a Virginia Republican who is chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and a longtime critic of the Big Dig.

He could never understand why a project that started as a $2.4 billion job in 1983 had grown to $12.2 billion in only 17 years.

How could a Virginian be expected to know that that is the way things are done in Massachusetts?

The overrun, said Wolf, "suggests a lack of due diligence and I think deliberate deceit and deception by project managers."

Transportation Secretary Rod Slater promised "where appropriate to act in a way that might bring the force of the criminal system to bear then that is the course that we will take."

That's where the Big Dig stands now, except that Slater has frozen some $5 billion in future federal highway aid to Massachusetts until Big Dig finances get squared away and the state is trying to scrape up enough money to finish the job

All of which leads some longtime residents to fear that a lot of other badly needed road projects around the state won't get done while all available cash is funneled into the Big Dig in Boston.

After all, isn't that the way it's done in Massachusetts?

No one running for Board of Health

Three-way contest assured for selectman seat

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Three of the town's elected boards are without candidates for their open seats at the April 8 town election.

No candidates returned nomination papers for the seat on the board of health being vacated by Alix White.

Also no one pulled papers for the housing authority seat held by Steve Wigmore and Steve Endris' recreation commission seat. Wigmore and Endris are not seeking reelection. Because no candidate for those boards will be on the town election ballot, the seats will likely be determined by write-ins.

"There will probably be a write-in campaign for someone, but we haven't determined who that will be," said member Steve Bobo about the health board. "If someone qualified comes up and evinces interest, I'll stand at the polls and hand out flyers for them. That's what you have to do with write-ins."

Bobo said he feels the board's work on the wastewater management plan has generated confidence about its competency from residents.

"I don't know why no one is running, but I think people in town are generally happy with the way the board of health is being run," he said. "I must have asked 40 people to run. I've asked everyone I know who I thought was qualified."

"If someone qualified comes up and evinces interest, I'll stand at the polls and hand out flyers for them. That's what you have to do with write-ins."
— Board of health member Steve Bobo

Without a candidate on the ballot, Bobo said his greatest concern with a write-in candidate is continuing to maintain a good working relationship between the health board's three members.

"Robin Lawrence has been a valuable asset, with very innovative ideas," Bobo said of his fellow board member. We'd like someone willing to contribute to the very important things we have coming up."

Contested races will be few and far between at the April 8 town election, as only three town boards will have more candidates running than available open seats.

Nomination papers for town offices were due Tuesday at the Town Clerk's office, with 50 signatures of registered town voters.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas, who said some of the signatures were still being certified at press time, said all three candidates for the lone open seat on the Board of Selectmen had returned nomination papers.

Thus, a three-way race is on between former selectman Michael Sullivan, planning board member Robert Sturdy, and former advisory committee member Leland Jenkins for the seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan.

Two town boards which would have seen races will not because two prospective candidates decided not to return their nomination papers.

Glenn Pratt, who had pulled papers for water commissioner, and Charles Sturdy, who pulled his papers for the school committee, both declined to file nomination papers by the Tuesday deadline.

As a result, incumbent John McNabb is the lone candidate for water commissioner and former state senatorial candidate Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts and former advisory committee member Richard Flynn will run unopposed for the two open seats on the school committee.

While those boards will not see a race, two candidates will vie for one seat on the planning board. Former Osgood reuse committee chairman Chris Ford will run against Randy Patterson, a political newcomer in Cohasset who was vocal in opposing a cell tower in his Ledgewood Estates neighborhood.

The only other town board to have a contested race will be the board of library trustees, where incumbents Agnes McCann, Patience Towle, and Carol Riley will be joined by Lance Norris as candidates for the board's three open seats.

Both sewer commissioner Gary Vanderweil and board of assessors member Michael Patrolia will run unopposed for reelection.

Relay For Life kickoff is March 1

In anticipation of the American Cancer Society's fourth annual Relay For Life, the relay committee is hosting a kickoff at the Red Parrot Restaurant, 258 Nantasket Ave., Hull, at 7 p.m. Wednesday, March 1.

This year's relay event will take place at Cohasset High School from 3 p.m. Friday, June 9, through noon on Saturday, June 10.

Relay teams representing families, clubs, churches, neighborhoods and companies will join the race to beat cancer by walking, strolling or running around the high school track. Teams will camp out in tents around the track and will enjoy the music, food and camaraderie. Residents of Hingham, Hull and Scituate are asked to join Cohasset in the fight against cancer.

The Cohasset Relay received recognition from Relay For Life founder, Dr. Gordon Klatt for being one of the top relay events in the country. Last year, the Cohasset Relay For Life raised more than $77,000 for the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, prevention, detection, and patient services. This includes such local services as Road to Recovery, Reach to Recovery, Look Good Feel Better. Boys hoop closes out season

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Even though the Cohasset boys varsity basketball team finished their season with a sub-par 4-14 record, coach Ron Ford has seen this year not as a disappointment but more as a learning experience.

"I am proud of the way we played," said Ford. "This team is one that is going to play hard no matter what; regardless of our record. I am very proud of that."

It was a very tough year for Cohasset; a town where it seems like it was only yesterday that they were perennial state champion threats. However, there were a number of facets that make up a good basketball team present in this squad.

First, Cohasset made, as Ford called it, "tremendous strides" in their motion offense.

"This was the third year we have used the motion offense," noted Ford. "And this year I think we did a good job running it. We have evolved into an outside shooting program where, when I started coaching [this offense] we were primarily an inside threat."

The second factor Ford was particularly proud of was the much improved perimeter game.

Juniors Doug O'Brien, Erik Shea, T.J. Bilodeau and sophomore Matt Bilodeau, all of whom will be playing for Cohasset next year, were keeping defenses honest all season with consistent outside shooting.

"Those four can all stroke the three, they are all excellent outside shooters," praised Ford.

The last quality of this year's Skippers that Ford made mention of was the leadership from his four seniors, tri-captains Khalil Madyun, Craig Parker and Kevin Andrews, and Jake Nolte.

"Khalil had a tremendous year, making the all star team," noted Ford.

Madyun averaged 10 points and seven rebounds per game, while shooting a Wilt Chamberlainesque 60% from the floor for the season.

"And Kevin really picked up the scoring load down the stretch."

Andrews averaged 18 points a game for the last four games.

"Craig has shown good leadership all year; he's a real hustler, and Jake had those huge tip-ins that led to our win over Carver, and had that 21 point night, (in a 78-45 win over Sacred Heart)" said Ford.

These seniors will be sorely missed not only because their leadership will absent, but they also represented the only centers and power forwards Cohasset had to offer.

"We are going to have our whole backcourt back, and it will be a very solid backcourt, but our frontcourt is the big question mark," said Ford. "I think that if we can have an inside presence, we will be okay."

Cohasset closed the season by competing in the South Shore Classic tournament along with neighboring towns Norwell, Hingham and Marshfield.

In the opening round, Cohasset was matched up against the undefeated Clippers of Norwell, who with league MVP Danny McNamara and Gerry Corcoran, who Ford deemed "the best freshman I have ever seen", are expected to be among the top seeds in the state tournament.

Ford summed up the whole year with what he feels needs to happen next year to have a successful team:

"They learned how to play through adversity this year. This team is going to work harder in the off-season than any I have ever seen. What we really need is for those juniors to step up next year and become go-to players. I am disappointed with our record, but not with the kids. I am really proud of the way we played."

Sheerin heading to states

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Along with her God-given talent, there's one huge reason Cohasset-Norwell gymnast Kristin Sheerin is heading to the State Individual championships on March 4 at M.I.T. in the all-around.

At the team's recent end-of-the-season banquet at Kimball's By the Sea, Sheerin, along with teammate Carlie Carter, was presented the Perfect Attendance Award by head coach Ruthann Ardizzoni for the fourth year in a row.

"Her goal was to compete well with her teammates and qualify for the State Individual in the all-around."
Ruthann Ardizzoni

Add in the year-round training at her craft and there's little doubt hard work and the constant drive for perfection is behind Sheerin's stellar season for the 6-4 C-N team.

Through it all, Sheerin never forgot the team aspect of her sport and what the overall goals were for the season.

"Her goal was to compete well with her teammates and qualify for the State Individual in the all-around," said Ardizzoni, who is turning over the head coach reigns to Kara Connerty next season.

Sheerin improved drastically from a year ago, where she qualified for one event at the State Individuals to four this year.

The meet consists of 12 gymnasts from the North and South sections competing on each piece of apparatus. The all-around competition includes 10 gymnasts from the North and South.

The meet is arguably one of the toughest to qualify for in high school sports. In the all-around, for example, competitors had to average a score of 34.65.

It doesn't get any easier in the individual events either. The averages include an 8.7 on the floor, 8.475 for the vault, 8.4 on bars and 8.465 on the beam; not exactly routine scores by anyone but the best in the state.

Along with Sheerin, Scituate's Gina Verge will compete in the all-around after drawing the No. 1 South seed. Meg Peterson of Hingham will compete on both the vault and bars, and teammate Bronwyn Riggs will be strutting out her floor routine.

Sheerin was also voted C-N's team MVP and Beam Queen, the latter she earned for the fourth consecutive year. She shared the Most Consistent and Most Dedicated Award with Carter. Amy Maree took the Most Spirit Award and Katherine Coyne was Most Improved.

The team presented Ardizzoni with an engraved mantle clock in appreciation for her 15 years as head coach. Ardizzoni said Connerty should do a good job in her new position and sees a definite upward move by C-N in the coming years, beginning with next winter's team.

"They're going to be a really good team next year," Ardizzoni said.

Cohasset High seniors wrestling with success

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

How's this for a rebuilding year.

The young Cohasset High wrestling team struggled to live up to its lofty standards from seasons past for most of this year. The Skippers appear to be hitting their stride as the season winds down, piling up 57 points to finish 11th at the Div. 3 state tournament in Wayland on Sunday. Cohasset was just three points out of making the top 10.

Chris Pratt wrestled well at 125 for a third place finish.

"He was in probably the toughest weight class of the tournament," said coach Torin Sweeney. "It had two state champions and two finalists returning from last year. That weight class was loaded. There were kids who placed last year that didn't place this year."

It was an impressive performance, to say the least.

"He lost a tough semifinal, but was able to bounce back and win two consolation matches to take third," said Sweeney .

Pratt qualified for all-states, as did Liam O'Donnell at 160 and Kevin DeVito at 171, both of whom finished fourth.

"I'm very pleased with the way they wrestled," said Sweeney. "They did about as well as they could. They couldn't have wrestled any better. It was nice to see all three seniors qualify for all-states."

"I'm very pleased with the way they wrestled. They did about as well as they could. They couldn't have wrestled any better. It was nice to see all three seniors qualify for all-states."
Torin Sweeney

Sophomore Dan Littauer won a match at 140, and senior Joe Carbone got hurt in the second to last dual meet of the season and was unable to wrestle at 215

"I'm very pleased with the way they finished," said Sweeney. "We've made the top 10 the last three years, but we had a young team the last the last three years."

The Skippers will spend this week getting ready for all-states.

"We'll train with some of the local teams," said Sweeney. "We'll get these guys ready."

Just last year, the Scituate High wrestling team posted a 2-10 record.

This season, the Sailors finished with a 6-6-1 record and sent seven wrestlers to the Division 3 state finals.

Andrea Giacomozzi went at 103 as an alternate. Kyle Giacomozzi competed at 119, as did Kris Peters at 125, Andrew Golder at 130, and Tariq Yasim at 171. Also representing Scituate were Phil Martin at 215 and Marlon Pontes at heavyweight.

"Both Kyle and Tariq qualified for the second day," said coach Tom Giacomozzi. "They both finished in sixth place. It was a good tournament, especially for Tariq. Both Kyle and Tariq wrestled exceptionally well."

An interesting sidebar occurred when Christina Stone, who was seeded second from western Mass. at 103, lost her first two matches. Since she was eliminated from the tournament, an exhibition was set up between Stone and Andrea.

Skipper seniors wrestling with success

"Andrea pinned her," said Tom Giacomozzi. "It was great."

The Hanover High squad didn't come away with such a great feeling. Titles are supposed to be decided on the mat, and not by a judge. Yet here was the final at 215, pitting Hanover's Matt Hawrilenko against Paul Bianchi of Pentucket. Bianchi prevailed by a score of 2-1 on a controversial call.

"He (Hawrilenko) lost on a stalling call," said Hanover coach Chris George. "The other guy was doing the exact same thing. Then, they didn't allow a move that he made right near the end. It would have been the first time a kid from Hanover won the state championship."

While it may have been a long trip back from Wayland for Hawrilenko, he did qualify for All-States next week at Salem and will have another chance.

"It's too bad that's how the state championship ends," said George. "But he gets another shot at all-states, and he will beat that kid."

Also competing for the Indians was Matt Dunn at 145. After twisting his ankle in the semifinals, Dunn ended up finishing fifth. He is an alternate to the All-States.

"This was Dunn's second year of placing," said George, who admitted he may have been more nervous as a first year coach than his wrestlers were.

"Without question," said George with a smile. "I was pretty bad. It was pretty intense."

Heavyweight Jim Lothrop was ill, but managed to wrestle well, as did Chris Delaney at 189.

Norwell brought seven wrestlers to the states last weekend and totaled 42 points to finish 14th.

"That was the highest we've finished in 12 years," said Norwell coach Jim Sullivan. "We had our first finalist since 1984."

That would be Mike Robertson, who lost a tough match, 8-6, for the second week in a row to Brendon Smith from Carver at 140.

"It was nice to see him in the finals," said Sullivan. "Michael wants to meet the Carver kid one more time."

Steve Mott was fourth at 189 to also qualify for all-states, along with Robertson. Mike Dye wrestled very well at 152 and lost a tough quarterfinal match.

"It was a good showing at 152," said Sullivan. "It was very, very rewarding to see kids that have been wrestling since freshman year, standing on the podium."

Others who wrestled this past weekend for the Clippers were Dan Lipshutz at 130, Grant Spraudlin at 135, Ron Anderson at 160, and Sean Acton at 215.

School bus accident under investigation

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset police have asked state police to inspect a school bus following an accident that occurred at about 3 p.m. last Friday.

The town-owned bus, which was driven by Kevin M. Soule, 54, lost control in slippery conditions as it was going around the corner in the vicinity of 260 Jerusalem Road and hit two trees head on.

Soule was shaken up and was treated and released at South Shore Hospital. There were four children ranging in age from 10-13 on the bus. They were not injured and were taken home by a passerby, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

The incident is under investigation by Safety Officer Richard Yoeum. State police will inspect the 1997 bus which has a bald front tire on the front driver's side, Jackson said.

"The state police will determine if in fact there is enough tread on it," he said.

In a telephone interview Tuesday, Supt. Edward Malvey said he had not talked with police and was not aware that the tire did not have enough tread but would look into the matter.

He explained that the buses are inspected periodically not only by the state police but also by the school department mechanic.

Malvey said the school department has a spare bus it can use should the bus involved in the accident still be off line when students return to school next week from winter vacation.

Police said speed was not a factor in the accident.

SPED deficit reaches $180K

informed so they can plan."

The news of a $157,000 increase in the amount needed to cover the deficit left school committee members stunned that their taxes dropping Tuesday night.

"It's enormously frustrating to have the kind of news," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo immediately after the announcement. "It's no one's fault but this has significant impact on the things we want to do. This type of thing is [out] of our control."

After digesting the news for a few days, DeGiacomo said Monday that special education costs are simply impossible to predict and change month to month.

"We knew the deficit was going to go up in the winter. December and March are [two] much higher deficit months, but ask the questions," he said. "The number is always in flux because things come up almost on a day-by-day basis."

Director of student services Lynn Silva, who oversees the special education department, was confident $180,000 would be sufficient to cover special education costs for the rest of the school year.

"Unless there are kids we don't know about who move in to town between now and June 30, we should be able to live within these numbers," Silva told the school committee.

The town budgeted for special education during the 1999-2000 school year at approximately $1.6 million. The total deficit of $180,000, which includes the $23,000 appropriated last December and the current $180,000 deficit, represents a 24 percent increase above budgeted special education costs.

The $380,000 deficit is a result of increased costs in virtually every area of special education, according to Malvey.

Day school programs account for a $143,000 increase, the largest portion of the deficit. Contracted services, which include occupational therapy, speech and language therapy, physical therapy, and adapted physical education, represent another $59,000 of the deficit.

Tutorial services, which include work with students who have dyslexia, home and hospital tutoring, and English as a Second Language, accounted for $42,000 of the deficit. Transportation costs accounted for an additional $31,000 of the deficit, while the cost of residential placements added $45,000.

The final piece of the special education deficit is the $60,000 cost of four new aides, each hired at $15,000. Three of those aides are at Deer Hill and one is at Osgood.

Malvey said he feels special education costs have been insufficiently funded for years.

"We're constantly playing catch-up, because the amount budgeted for special education is not adequate to cover the costs," he said.

The need to fund special education deficits at town meetings is due largely to a decision by selectmen not to set aside funds to cover additional special education expenses.

"Some towns budget a contingency for special education increases, but selectmen haven't wanted to do it that way here," DeGiacomo said. "They want to budget based on the costs they know."

Malvey said he would prefer a contingency fund to cover special education costs because they are nearly impossible to predict when budgets are finalized.

"The nature of special education is such that you can only put your finger on what's happening at a certain point in time," he said. "There can be changes in the services students need at any time, which makes it extremely difficult to plan. The unknown comes in when kids are evaluated. When that exercise happens, we have to provide special education services if they are deemed necessary."

Next year's special education budget is estimated at $1.7 million. A special education shortfall of about $300,000 is already planned for the 2000-2001 school year. Town Manager Mark Haddad has proposed waiting until the fall to fund the estimated shortfall, which is subject to change depending on state aid and other factors.

Haddad said the additional $157,000 special education deficit for this fiscal year impacts his plans for FY 2001.

"If they've [the school department] got another $150,000 problem, it affects what we're trying to do next year because they'll be looking to replace that money next year," he said.

By waiting until the fall to budget for a potential increase in special education costs, Haddad said an operational override can be avoided this spring. He said it makes far more sense to wait until special education costs are known before attempting to budget for them.

"We still have a lot of unknowns when it comes to special education," Haddad said last month. "We don't know what the state is going to give us. It's better to see what happens with special education in the summer and deal with it before the tax rate gets set."

The town applied for a $222,000 state grant to offset last fall's special education deficit, but were unsuccessful, according to Buckley.

"Our per-pupil expenditures are so far above the state average, they wouldn't even consider us," he said.

DeGiacomo said school officials try as best they can to limit the escalating costs of special education, but said state law demands the school department to provide a free and appropriate education to all students, regardless of disabilities they might have.

"We constantly assess whether there are less expensive ways to provide these services," DeGiacomo said. "For example, we'd look at hiring a specialist for a service instead of sending students out of district for that service if there were a cost savings involved. But we can't cut back on services."

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. and are held on alternate Tuesdays.

Middle-high school plans are unveiled

where we need three lunch periods," Collins said. "If we did that, we'd need to split classes in the middle, go to lunch, and come back and finish class. This is a great opportunity to avoid that."

Two new fitness rooms are planned beneath the cafeteria, one of which will provide space for dance, aerobics or wrestling. The other room will replace the current fitness center. Next to the fitness rooms will be new locker rooms for both the high school and middle school, which will include specific space for team rooms.

Raymond had planned to reduce the size of the practice field behind the high school and create an additional 80 spaces of parking next to Alumni Field, but Collins said the need for increased parking may not be great enough to warrant the additional lot.

"The only big crowds we get at the gym are for boys basketball," he said. "Against a very good crowd, we'll draw a big crowd, but it's easy to overstate the need for more parking. We're not talking about the University of Alabama here."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the practice field be left large enough to leave adequate space for a regulation-size field hockey field. She said the town's limited number of all-purpose fields makes it an important resource to conserve.

"I'd rather see us keep the fields and inconvenience people to walk up to the gym," she said.

Academically, the renovations and additions at the middle school will allows classes to be grouped in clusters, which superintendent Edward Malvey said will allow the interdisciplinary learning consistent with the middle school philosophy.

Space is also being included for an administrative area in the middle school, which Malvey said could become a necessity in the future.

"It doesn't necessarily mean an additional principal at the middle school, but it may mean an additional administrator," he said. "We're fortunate that Curt [Collins] and Jack [DeLorenzo, assistant principal] have breathed life into the concept of the middle school, but we felt this should be built in."

The middle school will also feature two computer labs and a new language lab. A new computer lab will also be added to the expanded library/media center, which will be shared by the middle school and high school.

The auditorium will continue to be shared by the two schools, but will be renovated to include changing areas behind the stage. Vocal and instrumental music rooms are planned for both schools, with two practice rooms for the high school as well.

Additions at the high school include an audio/visual room and one classroom for math, social studies, and foreign language.

Raymond said the middle-high school could be completed in five phases, proposing a plan which would begin in January 2001 and culminate in summer 2004.

The first attempt at the preliminary phasing would include a temporary library, which would allow the current library to be demolished. The new library, gymnasiums, cafeteria, locker rooms, and new middle school wing would all be constructed during the first phase, to be completed by April or June of 2002.

Some students would be transferred into those new rooms for the second phase, which would consist of building the science wing and administrative area at the high school. Raymond said the second phase could be completed by April 2003.

The third phase would involve finishing renovations at the high school and could be finished by Sept. 2003. The fourth phase, consisting of finishing renovations at the middle school, auditorium, and music facilities, could be done by April 2004. The final phase of the project involves demolition of the Sullivan Gym, which Raymond said could be wrapped up by summer 2004.

"This is only our first attempt at phasing," said Raymond. "We're trying to spend the money on building and equipment instead of temporary classrooms."

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said additional staff will be needed at the renovated schools, and said the impact on the school department budget will have to be studied.

"Clearly, some of these things will have an effect on the operational budget," DeGiacomo said. "We hope to have those numbers before town meeting."

Raymond said he hoped to have refined cost estimates by mid-March in preparation for the March 25 annual town meeting.

Officials displeased with school custodial bids

Maintenance funds returned to school department

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Unhappy with bids from private cleaning companies to provide custodial services in the town's schools, the school committee voted last Thursday to wait for more information before making a decision to outsource cleaning of the schools.

The decision puts the proposed transfer of school maintenance to the DPW on hold. Town Manager Mark Haddad said Tuesday he had transferred the $188,000 for school maintenance from the DPW budget back to the school department.

School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo said the board is still planning on transferring school maintenance to the DPW.

"Perhaps we should wait before taking any drastic measures on the custodial bids, but shifting maintenance to the town is where we still want to be at the end of the day," DeGiacomo said after hearing the bids last Thursday.

Because the transfer of maintenance funds from the school department to the DPW can only be done by town meeting, Town Accountant Michael Buckley said it makes sense to wait on appropriating a transfer until a decision is made on custodial services.

"We don't want this to be on the town meeting warrant with uncertainties," Buckley said. "This thing isn't dead. It's still being worked on. But the transfer of maintenance and contracting for custodial services is all one package. When the school department decided not to go forward with the contracted services, we transferred the money back over to the schools."

At the school committee meeting last Thursday, superintendent Edward Malvey said the school department received three bids for custodial services. The low bid of $273,000 was from Hellman Cleaning Services. A bid of $297,000 was made by SJ Services, while Capital Building Services had the highest bid, $342,000.

> "Perhaps we should wait before taking any drastic measures on the custodial bids, but shifting maintenance to the town is where we still want to be at the end of the day."
> — School committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo

Malvey said the school department currently budgets about $333,000 for custodial services and supplies. Though two of the three bids came are lower than the amount budgeted for custodial services, Malvey said the bids did not appear to present a savings after further examination.

"On paper, there would appear to be a savings, but that's only on paper," Malvey explained to the school committee. "When we factor in other variables, such as benefits, there could be a $50,000 increase to do it. It nets out to an additional cost."

Haddad, who oversaw an outsourcing of custodial services in two schools during his stint as town administrator in Littleton, was disappointed with the bids the school department received.

"The bids came in about $50,000 higher than we thought," he said. "The economy is just of control right now. If times weren't as good, you'd see these bids come down."

Malvey said he was disappointed with the low number of bidders responding to the school department's Request for Proposals [RFP] for custodial services. He said it might be necessary to alter the RFP to solicit more companies to bid at a price which would ensure a cost savings.

"It might be worth our effort to recast the model in order to do things differently," he said. "Do we need a custodian in each school? Do we need a custodian on duty at night? How can we maximize our services and do it in a more cost effective way?"

Malvey said he hopes a report from a consultant working on the Deer Hill and middle high school renovation project provides some answers to those questions.

The consultant is working with Hingham architects Strekalovsky and Hoit on maintenance and custodial plans for the renovated schools, which are mandated to receive state reimbursement for the project.

"I'd hate to see the report come in and say we're way out of line with minimum staffing," Malvey said. "I don't think we lose anything by waiting a few weeks."

Haddad said the custodial outsourcing and maintenance transfer doesn't have to be done at once for all three town schools.

"We could phase this in over time," he said. "Maybe we'll end up doing it one building at a time."

Fight leads to arrest of Quincy man

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A dispute over a license plate in Cohasset last Friday ended with Hingham police charging a Quincy man with nine offenses including operating under the influence of alcohol, resisting arrest and assault and battery on a police officer.

Cohasset Sgt. Robert Jackson said police got a call at about 1:45 p.m., Feb. 18 reporting a fight in the Bank Boston parking lot on Rte. 3A.

"But by the time we got there, they were gone," Jackson said. Witnesses provided the plate number and subsequently Hingham police stopped the green pick up truck on Rte. 228 near Glastonbury Abbey.

Hingham Officer Robert Mansfield stopped the vehicle and after the driver, Matthew Fitzpatrick, 29 of Marshfield got out, the passenger, Joseph H. Buckley, 39, of Quincy, slid into the driver's seat and took off, police said.

Buckley soon lost control of the truck and hit a stone wall at the monastery, police said. Buckley fled on foot and was caught and subdued by Mansfield, according to Hingham Sgt. Rusty Corcoran. Officers Brian MacDonald and Lisa O'Brien assisted Mansfield.

Corcoran said Buckley kicked the window of the cruiser popping the window out of place and damaging the frame.

Jackson said the fight in the Bank Boston parking lot was over a dispute with a Cohasset man who had apparently not returned license plates in a timely manner after purchasing a vehicle from Fitzpatrick.

Cohasset police will be seeking a warrant for Buckley charging him with assault and battery on the Cohasset man.

Hingham police also charged Buckley, who had four warrants, with operating to endanger, operating after his license was revoked, causing malicious destruction of property, disturbing the peace, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and larceny of a motor vehicle.

Fitzpatrick was not charged.

IT'S HAPPENING

Local author to give reading

Cambridge author Mameve Medwed will read and sign copies of her new book, "Host Family," Wednesday, March 1, from 7-9 p.m. at Buttonwood Books & Toys, Route 3A, Cohasset.

In the many short stories she's written for such magazines as Redbook, Playgirl and The Missouri Review, and in her debut novel, "Mail," Medwed has offered a witty, fine-tuned and poignant take on modern life and romance. In her latest novel, "Host Family," she outdoes herself with a hysterically original story about the fragility of relationships, the quest for stability and the parasite we call love, through the Lewises, for two decades the most gracious host family to international college students in all of Cambridge.

Call 383-2665 for more information or to reserve a place.

'Arsenic and Old Lace' on stage

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "Arsenic and Old Lace" at the Cohasset Town Hall March 10, 11, 17,18, 24 and 25 at 8 p.m., and March 26 at 2 p.m.

Tickets are $10 each and can be purchased at Front Street Book Store in Scituate, and Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and Hingham, or by phone at 834-0935.

Fight leads to arrest of Quincy man

By Mary Ford
STAFF WRITER

A dispute over a license plate in Cohasset last Friday ended with Hingham police charging a Quincy man with nine offenses including operating under the influence of alcohol, resisting arrest and assault and battery on a police officer.

Cohasset Sgt. Robert Jackson said police got a call at about 1:45 p.m., Feb. 18 reporting a fight in the Bank Boston parking lot on Rte. 3A.

"But by the time we got there, they were gone," Jackson said. Witnesses provided the plate number and subsequently Hingham police stopped the green pick up truck on Rte. 228 near Glastonbury Abbey.

Hingham Officer Robert Mansfield stopped the vehicle and after the driver, Matthew Fitzpatrick, 29 of Marshfield, got out, the passenger, Joseph H. Buckley, 39, of Quincy, slid into the driver's seat and took off, police said.

Buckley soon lost control of the truck and hit a stone wall at the monastery, police said. Buckley fled on foot and was caught and subdued by Mansfield, according to Hingham Sgt. Rusty Corcoran. Officers Brian MacDonald and Lisa O'Brien assisted Mansfield.

Corcoran said Buckley kicked the window of the cruiser popping the window out of place and damaging the frame.

Jackson said the fight in the Bank Boston parking lot was over a dispute with a Cohasset man who had apparently not returned license plates in a timely manner after purchasing a vehicle from Fitzpatrick.

Cohasset police will be seeking a warrant for Buckley charging him with assault and battery on the Cohasset man.

Hingham police also charged Buckley, who had four warrants, with operating to endanger, operating after his license was revoked, causing malicious destruction of property, disturbing the peace, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and larceny of a motor vehicle.

Fitzpatrick was not charged.

Price difference in prescription for pets and people

ous cases and plenty of evidence of elders who cannot afford their medications.

"There are patients out there who can't fill their prescriptions if they don't have any money," she said. "Either that, or they'll fill their prescriptions, but at half the dose. A lot of these people are on fixed incomes, and what seniors need usually equates to high prices."

Karen Barnes, the community relations coordinator for the Affiliated Community VNA organization in Rockland which represents more than eight towns on the South Shore including Hingham, said she agrees with Doherty's views.

"This is an ongoing battle," she said. "Even folks who have insurance still have to take a lot of money out of their pockets before they are reimbursed. Then there are the folks who don't take their medicine properly because they can't afford it. It just isn't fair."

The report by Delahunt involved analysis from studying numerous cases on the South shore and Cape Cod, the district he represents in Congress.

Another example in the study involves a medication called "Lodine," or as it is called in the animal world, "Etogesic." For an animal to have a prescription of the drug on a monthly basis, it costs $37.80. If a human needed a monthly prescription, it would amount to $108.76.

"I'm all for healthy pets," Delahunt said. "But not at the financial and medical expense of their owners."

Within the context of the study, Delahunt calculated the prices that drug manufacturers charge for human drugs based on the "Wholesale Acquisition Cost (WAC) that human drug wholesalers pay to acquire drugs for sale to pharmacists. WAC prices do not include rebates or other forms of discounts."

Delahunt reports that in order to obtain the accurate cost for animal drug prices congressional staffers worked with veterinarians. The staffers obtained these prices for five major animal drug wholesalers and determined an average price that animal drug wholesalers charge veterinarians for each of the drugs."

After calculating the prices, and finishing the terms of the report, Delahunt determined the problem of prescription drug costs was only growing.

And the elderly population in Massachusetts are one of the main bodies of people soaking up many of the cost ramifications.

Tell us what you think

- Got an opinion on the cost of prescription drugs? Think the consumer is getting gouged?
- Let us know what you think. Fill out our reader poll on our website at www.townonline.com/south and give us your views. Watch next week's paper for poll results.

"Just last month," he stated, "as New England dug out from the most recent snowstorm, an elderly Cape Codder was hospitalized for exposure to the cold. When asked why she had turned down her thermostat and instead huddled under an electric blanket, she said it was the only way for her to afford her prescription medications."

Delahunt said over the past year, the number of Americans without health insurance increased to 44 million people, 600,000 of which exist in the Commonwealth.

"The anecdotes about families choosing between food, heat, and medicine have ripened into truisms...it seems self evident that in addition to endangering a patient's health, this leads to significant additional costs to the public in the form of increased Medicare, Medicaid, and emergency room treatment...."

Of the example of the elderly woman who chose her electric blanket instead of her thermostat, Delahunt stated "Had her dog or cat needed some (of the medications she needed), they might have been more affordable.

"Why is this? Is the Winstrol (a prescription drug) used to treat renal disease in people better — 256 percent better than the Winstrol used for dogs? When (companies charge) seniors suffering from arthritis $71 more than pet owners for the same dosage of Lodine, does the company funnel that overage back into pharmaceutical research?"

Doherty has her own views on the price problem.

"The pharmaceutical side of it," said Doherty, "is that these companies will say they need to be reimbursed for all the marketing they do for their products, and for the research they have to perform. Let's face it, pharmaceutical companies are a profit-oriented industry."

As to why animal drug prices are so low, Doherty said she thinks maybe it is because marketing and public relations costs need not be spent on animals.

Although Doherty said the main problem lies within the elder community, she noted she has seen some of the same instances in young people who are just getting started, and may not have enough money to afford all of their life costs.

"The situation has definitely worsened over the years," she said. Doherty explained the situation could be as it is now because of the fact that more and more elders are entering managed care plans with the promise their prescription drugs would be at a lower cost.

She noted as more and more people enter managed care plans, various HMOs feel more and more underfunded, and thus, they adjust their "pharmacy benefit" which in turn increases drug prices for people.

"Now the very thing that attracted these people to these HMOs is either being taken away or changed in some way," Doherty said, "and that results in a lot of out of pocket expenses."

Like Doherty, Barnes said she feels the problem is centralized in the senior citizen community, but she said "young people without any insurance" often suffer from the same problem.

"Most of these people know they're taking their medication improperly, but they can't help it because they simply can't afford it," Barnes said. "This needs to be addressed. It's just a matter of getting the drug and insurance companies to look at the problem, and come up with something reasonable."

Of Delahunt's efforts at the federal level Barnes said "He's been a wonderful advocate for the elderly in Massachusetts and we certainly can't thank him enough for that."

Doherty said the state has recently come up with a plan called the Massachusetts Senior Pharmacy Program which will help ease the cost of prescription drugs for seniors and disabled people who meet certain criteria.

"The plan offers prescription benefits for disabled people and elders," Doherty said. "The plan will provide up to $1250 a year to help pay for drugs."

Doherty said people eligible for the program have to be Massachusetts residents 65 or older or people under 65 who meet the "disability guidelines for common health."

SSAC show "Fitting" features local talent

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER

It's an art show about women, by women. "Fitting: Generation, Gender and Geography," a South Shore Art Center show featuring the art work of a dozen local artists is set to open this weekend. Tara Law Campbell, Pam Golden, Michele Miester, and Page Railsback of Marshfield; Brenda Free, of Dover; Wendy Goldstein, Susan Nalband, Christine Peters, and Valerie Vitali from Scituate; Lisa Morder, from Cohasset; Ival Stratford-Kovner, of Dedham; and Lauren Teller, of Hull are the 12 artists fitting artwork into their busy lives and contributing to the exhibit.

"The show was put together many of these women have been teaching and working a lot in the art field," said South Shore Arts Center Director of Development Monica McKenny.

"Many of these women have had to literally fit their art into their lives because of all of their other commitments." For many of the women that involves taking care of children and in some cases older parents, McKenny said. But still, these artists have found the time to create works that represent the thoughts, feelings, and day-to-day activities of the so called "sandwich generation."

"That is one of the main concepts that brought this group of artists together," McKenny added. "Art work is a very important of all of [the 12 exhibitors'] lives. The work that will be in the gallery for this show will be innovative, and will reflect years of experience."

McKenny said all 12 of the women artists involved with the show have had years of experience in their respective fields, whether the field be sculpture, oil painting, or acrylic painting.

Landscaping basics

Part 2 - Developing a master plan

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Few events in nature compare to the beauty and serenity of a new fallen snow. Just as the last remnants of snow and ice from our previous snowfall were washed away, South Shore communities were transformed into a winter wonderland yet again as Mother Nature reminded us that winter will not officially come to an end for more than a month. With the shoveling chores nearly complete, I ventured forth with my camera in hand. A snow-covered landscape seems to necessitate a few photographs shortly after the snowfall comes to an end to capture its pristine elegance which tends to be spoiled as the days pass. Only the tiny paw prints of squirrels and a bunny leading to and from the water garden marred the uniform snowy blanket as it glistened in the morning sun. As the day progressed, slanted rays of afternoon sunlight filtered through the bare branches of the tall, statuesque trees surrounding the perimeter of my landscape casting intricate patterns upon the crystalline surface. Snow cover during the latter half of winter is welcomed by most gardeners as it protects many plants from winterburn and its presence is usually fleeting.

Green thumbs up

Nearly every landscape appears lovely after a snowfall, but as the melting process progresses to reveal the underlying plantings, the view may not be as appealing. Whether you are dealing with a new dwelling, an overgrown, mature planting or perhaps a neglected landscape, it is advisable to begin with a master plan. Even if you decide to hire a professional, a preliminary analysis of your family's needs and habits should be undertaken to ascertain the goals and objectives of your landscaping project. Sit down with all family members present and discuss the anticipated activities that are likely to take place on your property. This may necessitate a long-range plan for both financial reasons and future changes in the family's needs and pastimes.

The analytical process requires that you be somewhat of a visionary. Imagine your perfect landscape while being realistic about the possibility of achieving that end. Do you envision a swimming pool or tennis court? These features require considerable space, expense and maintenance. Where would you locate them? Do you require a storage shed, dog pen, clothes line, swing set, or space to park additional cars? If you have a smaller property, planning becomes especially important to maximize your living space.

The next step should be to prioritize your wishes. For some homeowners, a swimming pool may be the first and most important feature to be addressed; another may prefer to begin with plantings to surround the foundation of the home. It is often wise to begin with the installation of what is known as the "hardscape," which includes the driveway, walkways, retaining walls, decks, or patios. You may also want to enclose an area with fencing for the purpose of screening an unwanted view or containing pets or children in a safe environment. The latter space should be in close proximity to your home where you can keep a watchful eye.

Another consideration when formulating your master plan should be to determine how much time you plan to devote to the maintenance of your property. Do you have the financial means to hire a landscape company to assist you with the upkeep? Your final design should suit the way you live. If you have minimal spare time, you will want to create a low-maintenance landscape and incorporate a larger number of trees and shrubs, evergreen ground covers, ornamental grasses, bulbs, and easy care perennials such as hostas, daylilies and Siberian iris. Hedges, fruit trees, roses, vegetable gardens, large expanses of lawn and flower gardens tend to be high-maintenance and require more time and effort to look their best.

Do your homework. Look at books and magazines, mark the pages and note the styles which appeal to you. Try to find designs appropriate to the exposures and challenges posed by your own property. Recognize the inevitability that your needs and activities will change as you and your family age. Even if you know that your present home will not be your future residence, time, energy and capital invested in creating an attractive landscape usually help to increase the value and marketability of your home.

Whether you plan to tackle the landscape project yourself or hire a professional, analyzing your needs and doing some research in advance will simplify the design process.

Should you decide to undertake the process on your own, start simple. A successful, attractive landscape is an ongoing process. Over the years, changes and additions can and should be made.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 23

The remainder of this workweek has its challenges. Be sure to take extra time out for yourself, to pursue activities that help you to relax and maintain a positive attitude. Today the Libra moon continues inactive travel until 8:58 p.m. Tackle jobs that have been left hanging and finish them; review, redo, reorganize. The moon enters serious Scorpio at 8:58 p.m. and opposes Jupiter at 11:59 p.m. Don't get caught up in late-night bickering or power struggles. Meditate for inner peace and vision.

THURSDAY, FEB. 24

This is a day that can go either way. Keep it light. Don't let minor annoyances or setbacks get you down. Make light of situations you can't control. Influences are prime for developing projects that require study, research, analysis. Streamline your workload and avoid any commitments until the backlog has been cleared. A lunar polarity to Saturn affects the evening. Others may be moody, pensive, disagreeable. Keep the peace. Through prayer and meditation you can find inner strength and wisdom to make personal decisions.

FRIDAY, FEB. 25

A lunar alignment to Uranus this morning warns you to expect the unexpected. Allow extra time. Things may not go as planned. People may be hypersensitive, volatile and can overreact to situations. The Scorpio moon becomes inactive at 7:18 a.m. for the remainder of the day. You can be most productive, if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. Influences are prime for making repairs, redoing, reorganizing. New starts are off limits. Plan a quiet evening. Look within for answers.

SATURDAY, FEB. 26

The moon enters Sagittarius at 7:10 a.m., setting the stage for an exciting weekend. A barrage of planetary alignments are about to occur. The next few days will be action-packed. This weekend is prime for letting off steam, enjoying favorite sports and leisure activities. Be more spontaneous. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 10:53 p.m. Let fun and games top your agenda this evening.

SUNDAY, FEB. 27

Planetary action points to an exciting, fast-paced day. Plan to visit or entertain friends. Get back in the swing of favorite sports and physical activities. An ebullient Sagittarius moon forms five major contacts to planets, active until 7:28 p.m. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Mars may generate romantic fireworks. There are two pitfalls, however. Keep it light. A 90-degree alignment of Venus and Saturn warns against getting caught up in worries, criticism, self-doubt.

MONDAY, FEB. 28

This day is prime for relaxing, vacationing. If you have work projects to accomplish, it may be difficult to focus. You must have a clear plan of action and stick to it. The Sagittarius moon is inactive until 7:45 p.m. People will be sociable and talkative. However, organization and efficiency may take a back seat. Major alignments of Venus, Mars, Mercury and Pluto also impact the day and warn against making major decisions, signing contracts. The moon enters pragmatic Capricorn at 7:45 p.m.

TUESDAY, FEB. 29

This day holds high potential for productivity. Roll up your sleeves and take on big work projects. You can most successful. Start new activities before 10:06 a.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Saturn. Tackle jobs that require mental focus and attention to detail. You may be forced to confront the realities of a career or domestic matter. You can find solutions and make sensible decisions. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 11:38 p.m., when it aligns with Mars.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

New starts are off limits during the first two weeks of March. Planetary influences ease up considerably after the fifteenth, and the remainder of the month rates high across the board. Today in inactive Capricorn moon prompts you to stay busy with practical matters. Finish old, abandoned projects, go on a cleanup campaign. Get your life in order. An alignment of the sun and Mercury retrograde may shed new light on situations that have been troubling you.

Blue cheese dressing, smooth

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Blue cheese dressing sounds simple enough, but many cooks turn it into a Frankenstein of a recipe, adding Worcestershire sauce, chopped parsley, lemon juice, red pepper, minced garlic, garlic powder, onion and even cream cheese. Other recipes seem to forget entirely about the blue cheese, adding so little that one can hardly taste it. The question was: How can one make a relatively simple blue cheese dressing with a creamy consistency, a tangy, slightly sweet flavor, and a big cheese taste without being heavy or overpowering?

I started by testing four basic recipes, one each from Cook's Illustrated magazine, The Victory Garden Cookbook (Random House, 1982), The Fannie Farmer Cookbook (Bantam, 1994) and "The New Joy of Cooking" (Scribner, 1997). I started by eliminating ingredients that seemed unnecessary and unwelcome: cayenne, Worcestershire, minced garlic, chopped parsley, etc. The next question was consistency. Only one of the recipes used milk to thin out the dressing; the other three simply mashed the blue cheese with sour cream. I found that this method produced a heavy dressing, so I tried adding a bit of milk for thinning, finally settling on buttermilk after also testing cream.

Two of the recipes also added a whopping amount of mayonnaise — the "New Joy of Cooking" dressing used 4 ounces of blue cheese to a full cup of mayo — which left one with a dull Miracle Whip of a dressing. I found the same problem with the sour cream: three of the four recipes used a half cup of 2 to 4 ounces of cheese, which resulted in the same bland outcome. After much fiddling, I decided that 2 1/2 ounces of blue cheese worked well with 3 tablespoons each of buttermilk and sour cream plus two tablespoons of mayonnaise. Cream cheese, another common ingredient, was voted down since it is the essence of dull, adding none of the sprightly tang evident in sour cream. Yogurt was also tested but came up short in the flavor department and wasn't as smooth in texture as the sour cream. Now I had a recipe that was remarkably similar to the one published in Cook's Illustrated in its use of modest quantities of buttermilk, sour cream and mayonnaise.

Next on the list was the vinegar. Red wine vinegar was out, since it was the wrong color and much too strong. Cider vinegar was not smooth enough in flavor. Lemon juice added off-notes to the dressing. White wine vinegar was good, but I preferred rice wine vinegar since it was less acidic. As for the main ingredient, the blue cheese, I tried a variety of brands but preferred domestic blue cheeses, since they are creamier and milder.

I went back to test a bit of chopped herbs — parsley, chives and maybe even green onion — but they simply complicated the recipe and detracted from the simplicity of the dressing. To even out the taste, both sugar and salt were needed. Although the type of blue cheese will affect the salt level, 1/4 teaspoon salt ends up being about right for most cheese. I also liked a hint of sugar; 1/4 teaspoon was just enough to brighten the flavor of the cheese and round out the dressing. A few grinds of pepper were a welcome addition.

In terms of mixing the dressing ingredients, a fork turned out to the best and simplest tool. I liked small chunks of cheese and an evenly mixed dressing. I did note that the type of cheese affects the mixing. A very moist, creamy blue cheese will be harder to mix than a drier variety. If you have a problem mashing the cheese, simply add all the dressing ingredients at once to a bowl and then mash.

Master recipe for blue cheese dressing

The type of cheese will determine how much salt you will need. I find that creamier, wetter cheeses are harder to mash with a fork. With these sorts of cheeses, add all of the ingredients to the bowl at once, since the additional liquid makes the mashing easier.

1/2 cup crumbled blue cheese (2 1/2 ounces)
3 tablespoons buttermilk
3 tablespoons sour cream
2 tablespoons mayonnaise
2 teaspoons rice wine vinegar or white wine vinegar
1/4 teaspoon sugar
1/4 teaspoon salt or to taste
freshly ground black pepper to taste

Mash the blue cheese with a fork until the size of small curd cottage cheese. (If this is difficult, add the balance of the ingredients and continue mashing.) Add the buttermilk and stir to mix. Add remaining ingredients and stir until well combined. Adjust seasonings and serve immediately or store covered and refrigerated for up to two weeks. Makes about 1 cup.

SSAC a show"Fitting" features local talent

"These women have worked at their art for a long time. The important thing is that art has played a big role in all of their lives."

Monica McKenny South Shore Arts Center Director of Development

"These women have worked at their art for a long time," McKenny said. "And even though they may not be world renowned, they have all exhibited extensively, won awards, and taught at different places. A lot of have even received grants on their art. The important thing is that art has played a big role in all of their lives."

A variety of mediums make up the show including prints, watercolor, acrylic painting, collage pieces and three-dimensional work, McKenny noted.

When it comes to what a good piece of art can do for one's soul, McKenny said there are many benefits.

"Art is just so subjective," she said. "The more you learn about it, the broader your ideas get. People who don't know about art may start out with a very narrow view of it, but the fact is the more you expose yourself to works of art, the more you can appreciate what you're looking at."

Valerie Vitali, who is serving as the curator for the show is also one of the contributing artists. It was through Vitali's urging that the 12 artists came together for the show.

Vitali traditionally works in the medium of "figurative oil painting." Vitali said she got inspiration for her works in the show by walking around Boston at night and observing women doing mundane tasks like shopping.

Not only did Vitali observe them, but she took their pictures without them knowing. Her paintings capture the pictures she took.

"Women's lives are filled with great responsibilities," Vitali said, "but they are also filled with mundane ones. I wanted to show anonymous people going about their mundane tasks."

Vitali said she has a great amount of respect for the actual theme of the art show, because she is familiar with many female artists who are struggling to fit art into their lives.

"All the women who are exhibiting their art in this show are trying to fit all their tasks in life in. They may not be showing their pieces at the Museum of Fine Arts, but they are all enjoying full lives through their art, and they are women exploring new ideas. They are not working for commercial success."

Vitali is hoping her paintings and the work of her fellow artists will reach the public.

"You've got to engage the viewer so they stop and actually think about the work. It's disappointing when you put your heart and soul into a painting, and you see a viewer walk right past it. You want to make the viewer stop and think."

Vitali said there is "no agenda" in the art of the 12 female exhibitors, and she noted even the most inexperienced art critic can enjoy a show like this one.

"The work needs to be seen," she said. "Right now, people around the South Shore will have the opportunity to see all this great art work that's happening in the community, and it's being done by people just like them. The art work is not meant to be political, and it has no agenda. It's just the work we do."

Susan Nalband is another artist who will be exhibiting her unique art work at the show. She will be showing her "three-dimensional mixed media" work, which includes "soft sculptures made entirely from fabric."

"I always do something different," Nalband said. "I try to work in all kinds of mediums."

"I think a good work of art is something that evokes some feeling in a person, whether it be pleasure or discomfort. A good work of art will make a person feel something, and that person may not even know why they like it. It's about making people think," she said.

Think carefully before making your next move

Planning ahead eases the stress of relocating

Selling your house and moving to another part of the country, a neighboring state, or even across town, can be a traumatic experience. Planning ahead will obviously make a difficult task more bearable.

A detailed organizational plan is the key to making sure that everything — from your valued china and crystal, to the kids' toys — make it their new destination in one piece.

Long before you've secured the mortgage and signed papers at the closing, you should be thinking about how to make the big move go as smoothly as possible.

Weeks, and even several months ahead of time, it helps to make a checklist. The checklist should include such things as contacting a moving company to find out how much it would cost to hire a professional to haul the entire contents of your home from one location to another.

Consult the yellow pages of your phone directory and spend a day calling around to get the best prices. If you think you might be able to manage a move without the help of professionals and plan to do the heavy lifting yourself, it's worth it to put in a call to several different truck rental companies in order to get the best deal.

A detailed organizational plan is the key to making sure that everything — from your valued china and crystal, to the kids' toys — make it their new destination in one piece.

It's a good idea to get estimates from at least three moving companies. Be sure to inquire about insurance coverage to protect your valuables during the move.

If you're like most people, you've spent years collecting rooms and rooms full of paraphernalia. This is the time to decide which of your personal possessions you can live without and which ones you want to carry with you on the next stage of your journey.

Set aside a month, let's say, for cleaning out closets, the basement and the attic. Spend a day just cleaning out the refrigerator and freezer. Resolve not to buy any more canned or frozen goods that will take up storage space.

A tag sale can be a great way to get rid of unwanted household items, but this may take too much planning and time that instead could be devoted to the actual move.

Be creative and come up with other ways to travel light as you relocate. During the month-long weeding out process, take weekend trips to the local recycling center to dispose of unwanted items. Donate other expendable possessions to a local, non-profit social service group, making sure that what you donate is still usable and in reasonably good condition.

Many of these organizations will actually come to the house and pick up your donation, which may be tax deductible, of course. Check with the IRS or an accountant about tax-deductible information. Ask family members if they want any of your furniture or possessions that you may be willing to part with.

Before things become hectic and moving day approaches, gather all your files and begin tossing out old documents and pieces of paper that no longer serve a purpose. If such a step is too drastic, try consolidating files. Make sure to save all documents and receipts pertaining to the actual move. Make sure to save birth certificates, old tax files, wills, and other essential documents. Put treasured photos in albums so they don't get lost.

If you are moving a long distance, get the medical records of family members (veterinarian records for pets), and school records of the children. Also, the next owner of your house would probably appreciate a file you leave behind that contains warranties and instructional booklets on the major household appliances.

As you begin to leave your old life behind, it's time to focus on what's ahead. Consider subscribing to your new community's newspaper. This is a great way to find out about the schools, local government, health care facilities, shopping areas, etc.

Packing up your belongings and the contents of your house or apartment should begin about a month before you move. Gather up cardboard boxes and packing material. This is the time to clean the drapes, throw rugs and other linens. Notify the utility companies of your plans and ask for a reading and final bill. As the move approaches, close out bank accounts, notify the Motor Vehicle Department of your new address. Clear up any other obligations you might have, such as library fines. Notify the post office of your new forwarding address and cancel newspaper deliveries.

Nothing can guarantee a stress-free moving day, but proper planning can help you avoid major problems and costly mistakes.

It's a good idea to get estimates from at least three moving companies. Be sure to inquire about insurance coverage to protect your valuables during the move.

Build your own dream home

By Robert Segal, CFA
SALES MANAGER, BROCKTON CREDIT UNION

Lots of people wish they could build their own dream home. They can decide on three or four bedrooms, a spacious family room complete with a fireplace, or even a three-car garage. Building gives someone the chance to put their own ideas to work, customizing the design. Fortunately, many local lenders offer construction loans that can help make this happen.

The first choice to make is whether to buy direct from a builder or take out the construction loan yourself. When going directly with a builder, you can get into the home within about 120 days. This tends to be a turnkey situation, giving you less control over the home's design. In many cases, you have three or four basic models to choose from. Your biggest decision may be which colors to choose for the carpets.

When the homeowner obtains the construction loan, he retains much more control. In this instance, he either owns the land outright or purchases it prior to starting construction. Then the homeowner either hires a general contractor to put up the house or subcontracts the work out, acting as the general contractor. For a 2,000-square-foot house, the process takes four to six months.

This method allows you to work more closely with the bank and the builder. Here, more involvement is the key. You direct the process, overseeing the budget and the payment of contractors. In the end, you get exactly what you want. Another advantage is cost savings. Since you are picking up the finance charges, you can save money.

When the homeowner obtains the construction loan, he retains much more control. In this instance, he either owns the land outright or purchases it prior to starting construction.

The next step is finding a builder. In this market, they can be tough to find. Many locate their builder by word of mouth, or from a referral by an architect or a Realtor. Keep in mind that it is important to check out their references. You may also want to visit some other homes they have put up, so you can see and touch their work.

Once you have found the land and have signed the contract with the builder, it is time to find a construction lender. You may even want to get pre-approved before starting the process. Mortgage lenders offer a variety of construction programs.

Most require you to pay interest only while the house is going up, usually up to 12 months. The benefit is that you are only paying interest on the money you have borrowed. For example, if you borrowed $50,000 to buy the land and the bank has lent you $20,000 to pay contractors, then your monthly interest charge is only about $435, assuming an interest rate of 7.50 percent. The monthly interest payments increase as more money is borrowed. Once the house is complete and you have taken the full amount, then the bank will amortize your payments and you will start making regular principal and interest payments toward paying off the loan.

Find out from your lender how many closings they require. A second closing involves additional expenses and the inconvenience of coming in to sign more documents. Also, you should ask when the interest rate is set. Some lenders offer to lock the interest rate at the outset, while others charge one rate during construction and another when the house is finished. Often, this rate is up in the air for several months.

Lastly, find out how often the lender schedules inspections, when disbursements are made and how much will the lender lend you to purchase the land. For example, Brockton Credit Union makes weekly inspections and disbursements and will lend up to 80 percent of the value of the land.

Along with the application, the lender will require a copy of house plans, a plan of land, estimated cost sheets and specifications sheets. At the closing, you will need a building permit and homeowner's insurance for new construction.

For a decent lot, you should expect to pay a minimum of $90,000. More desirable lots can cost more than $200,000. Costs to build generally run $75 to $100 per square foot. When buying the land, it is important to ask what is included. Septic, water hookup and excavation expenses can easily add $20,000 to the cost of the project. And since many towns are limiting the number of new homes, permit fees are rising. You should plan for incidental expenses you may not have expected.

So whether you buy the builder's model or plan the house yourself, start thinking about the things you want in your new home. Pretty soon you'll be grilling on the deck of your new dream house.

New England Home Show opens in Boston

As the year 2000 heralds in the new millennium, it also marks the 50th anniversary of Boston's oldest and largest home show, the GMC New England Home Show, which runs Feb. 26 through March 5 at the World Trade Center in Boston. With the largest array of new ideas, expert advice and home related products, visitors will be bedazzled with ideas for remodeling, gardening, decorating and renovating their homes.

In celebration of its golden anniversary, the Home Show, sponsored by GMC, will offer more than 750 exhibits spanning 120,000 square feet, and include thousands of new products and ideas for the house and garden. In addition to the popular features such as the All-Star Chef Fest, the 2000 Home Show will also showcase a fully-operating Kitchen of the Future, daily guest speakers covering all areas of home renovations and remodeling, and the construction of the world's first giant play castle made out of more than 50,000 free-standing playing cards by the reigning "Guinness Book of World Records" holder. In addition, this year's sponsor, GMC, will give visitors an opportunity to win an authentic Michael Holigan-built home deck, worth up to a $6,000 retail value.

The New England Home Show has become an annual tradition to more than 75,000 attendees who are looking to better their house or garden," said Home Show manager Rich Castiglione of dmg world media. "In celebration of the millennium and the Home Show's 50th birthday, this year's show will be like no other in the history of Boston. There will be more exhibitors introducing new products, more workshops to provide the most up-to-date information and tips in home renovation and decorating, as well as daily entertainment designed for the whole family."

Talk with the Experts

The Home Show will offer a multitude of exceptional free lectures and demonstrations covering all areas of home and garden. Highlights of topics include: Creating a Home with Heart and Harmony Using Feng Shui, Interiors — What's New for the Year 2000, Landscape Design, and Today's Design for the Sexes.

Millennium Kitchen

How close will kitchens of tomorrow be to the popular cartoon, "The Jetsons?" Brought together by Boston Kitchen, Environmental Technologies and Jarvis Appliances, this collaborative kitchen will offer a glimpse of what's to come this millennium in the most popular room of the home — the kitchen.

Giant Play Castle

The reigning "Guinness Book of World Records" holder, Bryan Berg, will attempt to construct the world's first giant play castle built out of 50,000 free-standing cards. The construction, which will take more than 100 hours to complete, will be made out of playing cards and stand approximately 12 feet high and 15 feet long. It will include such intricate details as archways, towers and a drawbridge. Berg expects to place the final card midway through the show Wednesday, March 1. Spectators will be able to watch him in action from opening day Saturday, Feb. 26, through his anticipated completion later in the week. The giant play castle will remain in place through Saturday morning, March 4, when, at 11 a.m., the castle will be demolished. For budding card-stackers, Berg will offer daily workshops on card construction.

A Winning Home Deck

All visitors of the Home Show will have the opportunity to win an authentic Michael Holigan-built home deck, up to a $6,000 retail value. Holigan, a renowned home-builder and TV personality, will actually travel to the winner's home to design and install the deck.

Chef Fest

An annual tradition, the Home Show will again feature Boston's top chefs in its All-Star Chef Fest 2000. On Saturdays and Sundays of the nine-day show, visitors will learn how some of Boston's finest chefs prepare their specialty dishes and offer secret recipes to use at home. Presented by Boston Gas, the All-Star lineup includes popular chefs from such restaurants as Venezia, Jimmy's Harborside, Legal Seafoods, Nick's Place Restaurant and the World Trade Center Boston.

Unique N. Marshfield Cape

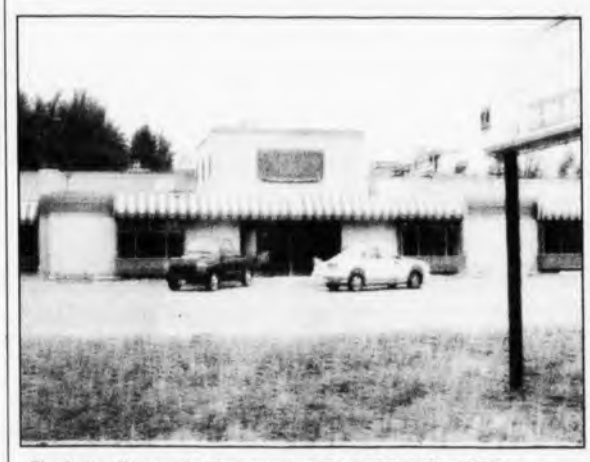
This North Marshfield Cape is truly unique. Included in the 4,300 sq. ft. of living space is an extraordinary kitchen with granite countertops, stainless appliances and custom cherry cabinets open to an equally fabulous family room, both with radiant heat beneath the wide pine floors milled from wood cut on site.

Climb one of the two staircases and find four bedrooms each one larger than the next. One of the bedrooms is a step-down with beamed cathedral ceiling and walk-in closet. At almost 450 sq. ft. it could double as a second-floor family room. Walk-in closets in three bedrooms with the master suite boasting a hot tub and shower. Also found on this floor is the laundry room with wet sink and utility room.

An additional 1,300-sq.-ft. finished space awaits in the lower level and leads to the 1,400 sq.-ft., three-car garage with oversized bay.

All this on a spectacular one-acre lot with multi-tiered waterfall that spills into the spa and then to the in-ground Gunite pool. The sprinkler system will help to keep the many flowers beautiful and give the new owners time to enjoy this truly unique property.

IN BRIEF



The former Heaven the Restaurant on Route 139 in Marshfield

'Heaven' sold to owners of Jamie's Grill & Pub

Conway Commercial recently brokered the sale of the former Heaven the Restaurant on Route 139 in Marshfield to the owners of Jamie's Grille and Pub.

George Jamieson exclusively represented the seller, Marshfield Realty Trust, and procured the buyers, brothers-in-law Ralph Constantine of Hingham and Scott Esposito of Cohasset. The new owners plan to open their family's third establishment at the Marshfield site; the other two Jamie's Grill & Pub locations are in Scituate and Braintree.

Constantine and Esposito paid $795,000 for the 13,000-square-foot property at 804 Plain St. and plan to spend another $400,000 in renovations. Heaven the Restaurant had been closed for approximately three years; Jamie's is expected to open in May. The new restaurant will have 280 seats and 112 parking spaces, as well as a function room with a capacity of 70.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company. Founded in 1957 the company has more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Rental car at Disney World is the way to go

ASK GEORGE

By George Hobica

Q. We'll be visiting Walt Disney World and don't want to rent a car. What's the best way to get from the airport to Disney World if we have a party of five?

A. I've found that Disney World has grown so big that having a rental car is sometimes a good idea since it can take quite awhile to get from one end of the park to another, especially if your hotel is not centrally located and you need to rely on the shuttle bus system.

But if you insist on going carless, a good solution is a company called Murray Hill's Disney Transportation at www.disneytransportation.com, or (407) 658-2284. They use luxury sedans and minibuses and charge a bit less than a taxi (a flat fee of $75 round-trip to in-park Disney hotels), plus there's currently a $5 off coupon on their Web site.

Q. I travel to Asia frequently, and sometimes have trouble getting on-line using America Online. Can you recommend another Internet service provider for that region?

I use AOL to get on-line abroad and, like you, sometimes experience problems, some of which aren't related to the AOL service itself. I haven't found a service provider that does a better job overseas.

AOL has some new access numbers you might want to check out, especially in China. Just go to keyword "Access" to find them. They also maintain a special help desk for overseas connection problems at (703) 264-1184. I've found it very helpful.

When I have problems getting on-line with my laptop from my hotel room I ask the hotel for help (I ask to speak to the hotel's own computer guru, not housekeeping or the switchboard). If all else fails, I use the hotel's business center or a cybercafe.

You can check AOL and other Web-based e-mail like Hotmail without using your laptop (they work from any computer). For more information, visit www.aol.com or www.hotmail.com.

Q. My husband and I retired last year at age 55. We are interested in doing last-minute travel, hoping that the prices are reduced from regularly advertised prices. We've been on one cruise to Mexico, which was a last-minute deal that we picked up from a fax at a travel agency. However, we are looking for a Web site that offers last-minute travel deals. Any suggestions?

A. There are lots of resources now for last-minute travelers like you.

For cruises, try Spur of the Moment Cruises, (800) 343-1991.

For air transportation, take a look at Airhitch, (800) 326-2009 in New York; (888) AIRHITCH in Los Angeles or www.airhitch.org) or Air-Tech, (212) 219-7000 or www.airtech.com). Both offer very low fares for last-minute standby travel. For packages, try Moment's Notice at (877) 260-6368 or (718) 234-6295, www.moments-notice.com); The Only Way to Travel, (www.onlywaytotravel.com, (800) 861-6747 or (614) 861-6747); Last Minute Travel.com, (www.last-minutetravel.com, (404) 467-5222); or 11th Hour Vacations (www.11thhourvacations.com or at (888) 740-1998)

George Hobica

Q. We're looking for a luxury barge trip in France but want to keep the total cost under $2,000 per person, including round-trip air. What's available in that price range?

A. A company called Premier Selections is offering air-inclusive packages beginning at $1,999 per person for a one-week luxury hotel barge cruise on the canals and rivers of Europe. These packages are available on all cruises from April 1 to Oct. 21, 2000.

Included in the package: round-trip economy-class air transportation from New York to Paris (add-ons available from other cities), one or two nights' accommodation at the Hotel Alexandra, or similar hotel in Paris, and a seven day/six night cruise aboard a luxury hotel barge with all meals, full open bar and daily sightseeing.

Some packages also include transfers to and from the Paris airport. Most of the barges carry around 20 people.

For further information and a brochure, call (800) 234-4000, or visit www.premierselections.com.

Everett anchored in Cohasset

Channel 5 newsman enjoying his first year in town

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

In television news anchor Anthony Everett's business, you learn to react quickly to change.

The co-anchor of WCVB-5's 5:30 newscast along with Heather Kahn, Everett knows any day's lead story could happen only minutes before he takes the air.

Learning to deal with changing circumstances on the job has boded well for Everett, who has seen his life change immeasurably in the past year.

This month, Everett's career took a turn as he was promoted to the position of co-anchor on the weekday 5:30 news from his former weekend anchor position. Last August, he moved to Cohasset from Wayland with his wife and 6-year-old son, Alexander.

A self-described ocean lover, Everett said he and his family are enjoying life in their Linden Circle neighborhood.

"Everyone in the community has been very welcoming," Everett said. "My wife and I have made a lot of nice friends and Alexander has met a lot of kids his own age. It's been great."

Though news travels fast in a small community like Cohasset, Everett said he sometimes encounters residents who recognize him but are unaware he lives in town.

"I walked into a bakery downtown the other day, and this older woman recognized me," Everett said. "She said 'Are you Anthony Everett?' and I said I was. She wanted to know what was going

Proposal to finance new library backed

Pratt library may be sold

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A plan for a new $2.9 million town library at the old Osgood school would not increase the tax rate, but would involve the sale of the current Paul Pratt library.

Library trustees Patience Towle and Sheila Evans presented construction drawings and the financial plan for the new library at Tuesday night's selectmen's meeting.

The board of library trustees developed the financing plan in conjunction with Town Manger Mark Haddad and Town Accountant Mike Buckley. The plan includes an expected library construction grant of $1.45 million from the state Board of Library Commissioners which would pay for half of the project's cost.

The bulk of the remaining $1.45 million would be financed through private donations and the sale of the Pratt library, appraised at $700,000 in 1998.

Though Towle and Evans would not estimate the amount they expect to garner in donations, Haddad said he expects a cost of $200,000 will remain after the Pratt library is sold and fund raising is completed.

"We've been trying to come up with a way to pay for the new library without increasing the tax rate over Proposition 2 1/2. Mike Buckley and I are very assured this will work."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Haddad said the remaining $200,000 could replace existing long-term debt and be paid back over 20 years.

Selectmen endorsed the plan by a vote of 4-1, with Diane Sullivan casting the dissenting vote.

For the plan to work, town meeting must approve the conversion of the old Osgood school into the new town library. The town has previously approved funds to create construction drawings for an Osgood library, but has yet to approve a new library as the use of the facility.

An additional article will be placed on the March 25 town meeting warrant to approve the sale of the Pratt library, contingent upon the state funding the expected $1.45 million and the library trustees raising a certain amount in private donations. Towle said the amount of expected donations will be announced by town meeting.

High voter turnout predicted for primary

Races generating tremendous local interest

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Compared to the lukewarm local interest in the 1996 presidential primary, voter response for the March 7 Massachusetts primary is predicted to be white-hot.

Only 19 percent of Hingham's registered voters took part in the 1996 primary, while only 21 percent did so in Cohasset. Four years ago, the primary races barely caused a stir. Opposition to President Clinton for the Democratic nomination was virtually nil. Likewise, Bob Dole secured the Republican nomination easily, fending off an early battle from Pat Buchanan.

It's a whole new ballgame in 2000. Sen. John McCain (R-Arizona) is offering a fierce challenge to Texas Gov. George W. Bush, the consensus favorite for the Republican nomination before the primary season began. On the Democratic side, former senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey has not won any primaries but is staying in the race with Vice President Al Gore.

"This is exciting, because there's been so much apathy in voting. I think there's going to be a tremendous turnout."
— Republican state vice-chairwoman Polly Logan

The primary races have led to expectations of a dramatic increase in the number of local voters who will turn out on March 7.

In Cohasset, Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she has already received 70 absentee ballots and expects many more to come in this week. In 1996, the town only received a total of 39 absentee ballots. The disparity leads Douglas to believe voter turnout in Cohasset will increase significantly over the 21 percent of four years ago.

"We're way ahead of where we were four years ago," Douglas said. "Hopefully, we'll get a turnout of 30 percent or more. Quite a few people came in to register before the primary deadline [Feb. 16]."

Douglas's prediction represents an increase of nearly one-third from the town's 1996 turnout, but that's nothing compared to Braintree, where Town Clerk Donna Fabiano is predicting a turnout of 45 percent.

Four years ago, Braintree only had a 20 percent turnout for the presidential primary. A 45 percent turnout would represent a 125 percent increase in voter participation in Braintree.

The March 7 contests are open primaries, meaning independent voters, known as unenrolled, can choose to vote in either the Republican or Democratic primary.

Unenrolled voters count for more than half of all registered voters in both Hingham and Cohasset. In Hingham, 57 percent of the town's 14,884 registered voters are unenrolled Democrats account for 23 percent of Hingham registered voters, while Republicans make up 20 percent of the total.

In Cohasset, 58 percent of the town's 5231 registered voters are unenrolled, while 21 percent are Republicans and 20 percent are Democrats.

The 2000 primary will be the first election in which unenrolled voters account for more than 50 percent of the state's registered voters, said Jack McCarthy, chief of staff for Mass. Secretary of State William Galvin. McCarthy cited three major factors as reasons for the large number of unenrolled voters for the

Lunch program is back in the black

No longer needs school subsidy

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A previous deficit in the school lunch program has been reversed this year, allowing the school committee to put a $10,000 subsidy for next year's program toward the cost of a new teacher.

Though a recent contaminated food scare caused the loss of just under $2,000 worth of food, superintendent Edward Malvey said the school department would only lose $90 because of a government subsidy.

A Feb. 7 recall of USDA foods shipped from a Brockton warehouse to more than 200 schools and day care centers in the state caused the food to be discarded.

Malvey said the school department and cafeteria staff acted quickly to ensure no students or teachers were affected from contaminated foods.

"We're in good shape right now, but we understand things can change."
— Supt. Edward Malvey

"No one became ill and none of our lunches were affected," Malvey said. "The products were taken off the shelf and [Health Agent] Dr. Godzik did an inspection."

While the loss of contaminated food caused the school department's food service provider, Chartwell's, to scramble to replace the food at market prices, the overall school lunch program has recovered from the deficit it has run in recent years.

During the summer, the school committee looked at ways to increase revenue in the program. At the suggestion of Chartwell's management, the committee voted to increase the price of school lunches by 25 cents for both students and staff.

"They [Chartwell's] felt it was comfortably within the range of prices with their other clients," said school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo.

The increase in prices has helped reduce the deficit, as have new programs instituted by Christine Geyer, director of food service for the Cohasset Public Schools.

"We try and do fun things," Geyer said. "We've changed the menu a bit. We're doing more stir-frying and making things like chicken fajitas. We're doing a bagel and soup combination at the high school which has been really

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or election day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home. Registration is closed for a brief period before each town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections.

The last day to register to vote for the Annual Town Meeting and the Annual Town Election is Friday, March 3. The clerk's office will be open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Mail-in registration forms are available from the town clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before the cutoff date.

Open space needs members

The Open Space Committee is looking for new members to update Cohasset's "Open Space and Recreation Plan." This plan, required by the state, serves as a guide in developing open space and recreation opportunities for Cohasset. Committee members can also become involved in the implementation of the plan. For more information, call Debbie Cook at 383-6313.

Correction is noted

In last week's Mariner, a quote was attributed to school committee chairman Mark DeGiacomo which said all students eligible for special education services were entitled to a free and appropriate public education.

DeGiacomo said the standard in Massachusetts is a maximum feasible education, which has more stringent guidelines than a free and appropriate education.

"A maximum feasible education is deemed as a higher standard," DeGiacomo said Monday.

The Mariner regrets the error.

Project endorsed

Selectmen voted 4-1 Tuesday night to recommend the $41 million renovation of Deer Hill and the middle high school.

Selectman Diane Sullivan cast the lone dissenting vote, saying voters should be given another choice on the town meeting warrant.

"The town's not given another option," Sullivan said.

Selectman Merle Brown said the cost of a renovation-only option will be discussed at the March 25 town meeting.

"The school facilities committee is going to present other costs, but their job is to recommend an option," Brown said.

Selectman Thomas Callahan had high praise for the architects from the Hingham firm of Strekalovsky and Hoit who have worked on the renovations.

"I want to commend the architects on this project," Callahan said. "I'm Mr. Skeptical, but I'm very confident in these guys."

RTF stickers

Selectmen voted 4-1 Tuesday night, with Fred Koed opposed, to raise the RTF sticker fee for residents from $85 to $100. The increase will fund the $27,000 needed to finance a DPW laborer position at the RTF.

"We need the man up there," Town Manager Mark Haddad told selectmen. "We need someone to do the job of volunteers who can't be there all the time."

The senior citizen sticker fee of $65 will remain unchanged.

Selectman Thomas Callahan, who had previously been part of a 3-2 majority against the sticker increase, changed his mind this time around.

"I'm going to change my vote because we need this employee," Callahan said. "But I urge residents to accept Pay-As-You-Throw, because we have to reduce costs at the RTF.

Permit fee waived

Selectmen voted 3-2 to recommend waiving the 1 percent building permit fee for First Parish Church, which plans to construct a new, $1.2 million parish hall.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris, a member of the First Parish congregation voted along with fellow selectman Thomas Callahan against waiving the fee, which would have come to $13,000.

"I don't support this with First Parish, as I didn't with St. Anthony's," McMorris said. "We have a $180,000 SPED deficit, and I don't feel taxpayers should be subsidizing building projects."

Callahan said churches should be no different than other landowners when it comes to building fees.

"The distinction is whether there should be a disparity in the fees property owners are required to pay," he said. "We have separation of church and state."

Selectman Diane Sullivan said the issue of waiving the fee was not a matter of separating church and state.

"I don't see this as showing favoritism for a church," said Sullivan, who voted with Merle Brown and Fred Koed to waive the fee. "I would feel the same way if we were talking about the community center or any other non-profit."

Lillard Field article

A $20,000 article to renovate Lillard Field has been removed from the March 25 town meeting warrant because the Deer Hill and middle high school renovation project is expected to impact the field.

At Monday night's school committee meeting, chairman Mark DeGiacomo said construction is likely to impact the field for at least a couple of years.

"With the shifting of the gym toward Alumni Field, it looks like Lillard's going to be gone for a while, frankly," he said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the renovation of the field could be rolled into the school renovation project, allowing it to be reimbursed at 60 percent.

Haddad said the school committee has requested using the $20,000 previously allocated toward the Lillard Field article to reduce the $180,000 special education deficit.

Selectmen said they would like a breakdown of the special education deficit before agreeing to allocate the $20,000.

"I want something in writing detailing how the money was spent," said selectman Merle Brown.

Graves available

Gravesites at the Beechwood Cemetery are now available for purchase on a pre-need basis to residents and former residents who resided in Cohasset for a period of one continuous year.

The cost per grave is $725 for residents and $1,000 for former residents. Grave purchases are limited to two gravesites in any cemetery under the jurisdiction of the Town of Cohasset.

Anyone wishing to inquire about purchasing graves should contact the D.P.W. office either in person or by phone, 383-0273.

Informative school coffees are slated

Members of the Cohasset School Committee and Building Facilities Committee will attend information meetings regarding the proposed repair and renovation projects for the Deer Hill and Middle/High Schools. These coffees and neighborhood gatherings will be held throughout the town during February and March to give citizens an opportunity to ask questions and to share their recommendations for the proposed projects.

Call school committee member Betsy Connolly at 383-1248 for additional information.

Scituate cell tower hearing turns ugly

By Dan Gravel
STAFF WRITER

The controversy over the proposed construction of a 180-foot tall cellular communications tower on the Scituate-Cohasset line reached a boiling point last week

The problems began at the Scituate zoning board of appeals hearing Thursday when Cohasset resident Randall Patterson — an outspoken opponent of the cell tower proposed by Omnipoint Communications — corrected board chairman Wallace Arcand by saying that there are 14 plaintiffs in the federal court appeal of the tower.

Arcand, who said the zoning board only had five names on file, fired back, "I don't give a damn if there are 400 applicants." He implied that the extra names could have been placed on the list in a manner that was something less than honest.

When Patterson, of Ledgewood Farm Drive then wanted to clarify what his rights were at the hearing he got another earful.

"As far as I'm concerned you have no rights," said Arcand who is a lawyer. "This is a slam dunk. There's no reason for an appeal."

"I'd like some respect from you to let me speak," responded Patterson.

At issue was whether the zoning board could order the planning board to rescind the permit that it issued to the communications company. Arcand contended that if the order to rescind was given, building commissioner Neil Duggan would be in contempt of court because of a federal ruling which stated the planning board had to issue the building permit to Omnipoint as requested.

"The court ordered him to issue the building permit. We're not going to tell him he can't do that," said Arcand.

Patterson then asked for clarification on the judge's order to which the chairman responded, "What am I talking to a wall?"

Torin Sweeney, another project opponent criticized Arcand for the way he conducted the hearing. "I am disgusted with your tone at a public hearing," Sweeney said.

"I'd like some respect from you to let me speak."
— Randall Patterson of Cohasset

"I don't give a damn whether you're disgusted," replied Arcand.

The three plaintiffs at the hearing are all abutters of the proposed tower. When construction is completed the Pattersons will have a clear view of the tower from the front of their house. They are part of a group of 14 neighbors to the site who have filed suit to stop the tower's construction.

Whatever part of the hearing was not mired in a heated exchange was drowned in semantics. The plaintiffs questioned whether the tower has to be 180 feet tall. Zoning board members argued the height was not specified in the court order, but it did state the permit should be issued exactly as requested. They also asked the board if the building permit application was filled out correctly, noting that Omnipoint is referred to by three different names. This raised concern with the plaintiffs who wondered if this seeming inconsistency would allow the company to hide from responsibility if anything goes wrong with the tower.

Duggan attempted to ease those concerns by assuring the plaintiffs that it is the same entity.

"I haven't spent more time with an appeal under a microscope in my five years in office than I have with this one," he said, satisfied that the application was done properly.

The board also said that it did not have the authority to put conditions on the permit because the planning board has sole authority for granting special permits for cell towers. Arcand said that the zoning board was responsible for cell towers in the past until the town bylaws were amended.

The plaintiffs, angry at the town's conduct throughout the entire process, gained no satisfaction from the hearing. They said they are considering an injunction against Omnipoint so building cannot proceed until there is a court decision on the appeal. Patterson said he had a verbal agreement with Omnipoint that he would not file an injunction as long as the company did not begin building until after the decision on the appeal. But he said Omnipoint has apparently broken that agreement by already putting pods in the ground which serve as a foundation for cell towers.

Also of concern to the plaintiffs was the tone taken by Arcand at the hearing. Randall and Jean Patterson as well as Sweeney said they were "shocked" at how they were treated by the chairman.

"For a public official to use profanity against citizens who are trying to protect other citizens is unbelievable," said Jean Patterson.

Randall Patterson vowed to make a call to the attorney general's office to see if any disciplinary action can be taken against the chairman.

"The democratic process should not have been treated this way," Sweeney told the zoning board.

Town to take over school building maintenance

Only one employee to be transferred to DPW

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The town will take over maintenance of the town's public schools, but will do so with $115,000 less than previously planned.

The school committee had planned to transfer $266,000 to the town DPW to perform maintenance in the schools, which included the school department's maintenance budget and three employees to be transferred to the DPW.

Instead, the maintenance will be performed with $151,000 and only one employee switching to the DPW.

"I had wanted to have three employees, but we're only able to get one right now," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "The remaining $115,000 is going back to the schools for custodial services."

Haddad said the decision to transfer maintenance to the town with fewer resources was made after a meeting with superintendent Edward Malvey and school committee members Kathy Olsthun and Mark DeGiacomo.

Haddad said the focus of maintenance efforts will be on the Osgood school, assuming the $41 million renovation of Deer Hill and the middle high school is approved by voters.

"Since two of the three buildings will hopefully be renovated," Haddad said, "we won't be doing a lot of maintenance in those buildings for the next couple of years, except for minor repairs."

The planned $266,000 transfer of maintenance to the town was to be contingent upon the school department outsourcing its custodial service to a private cleaning company.

Malvey was unhappy with the bids the school department received last month from private cleaning companies, saying they came in $50,000 higher than he had hoped. He suggested putting the custodial service out to bid again, reworking what's asked of the cleaning companies in order to achieve lower bids.

The school committee agreed with Malvey's proposal, voting Feb. 17 not to outsource custodial services until the bids could be reworked.

Haddad said the lowest "acceptable" bid for custodial services was $297,000. He said the Request for Proposals [RFP] designed to solicit bids may have asked for too much.

"It was like the Cadillac of RFP's," Haddad told selectmen.

Selectman Thomas Callahan said the standards of the school department need to be lowered in the next RFP to achieve a more cost-efficient bid.

"I think this is backtracking," Callahan said of the school committee's decision to wait before outsourcing custodial services. "Instead of a Cadillac, make the RFP a nice Buick. There's a mandate from this town to make this switch."

Haddad asked selectmen to approve the transfer because it was the last piece of unfinished business remaining in his proposed FY 2001 budget. Selectmen agreed 4-1, with Diane Sullivan dissenting, to transfer the $151,000 into the town budget.

Still, Callahan clearly was not pleased with the town taking over school maintenance for $151,000.

"We're taking over the maintenance for less money, and the egg's going to be on the town's face."

They will also be a wellspring of imaginative solutions and ideas for many problem windows or rooms.

Everett anchored in Cohasset

on, what I was covering in town. I told her I lived here and she said 'Oh. Well, welcome to Cohasset.'"

Everett has been at Channel 5 for over a decade, starting as a reporter in December 1989. He was elevated to weekend anchor in July 1994, a position he held until his promotion this month. Though he has progressed steadily through the reporting ranks, it became his chosen career almost by accident.

Though editor-in-chief of Tufts University's daily newspaper as an undergraduate, Everett did not plan upon a career in journalism after receiving his degree. The native of New York City went to Colorado after graduation to hit the slopes before attending law school. Opportunity would soon alter those plans, however.

"I was going to be a ski bum for a year while I was awaiting law school results," he said. "I got into a couple of law schools, including BC, but I just kind of fell into a job in radio and TV."

Everett cringed when recollecting the audition for his initial job in television.

"I was horrible," he laughed. "It was awful."

The audition could not have been as bad as he remembers, because he was hired as a sports reporter and anchor at KSPN-TV in Aspen, Colo. in 1984. While he was a collegiate soccer player and enjoyed sports, he soon found himself drawn to news reporting.

"News was where my heart was," he said. "It seemed more important and more rewarding because you can have an greater effect on people's lives."

Everett's switch from sports to news proved to be a wise career move. He became an award-winning news director and anchor, and his work in Aspen earned him a job as a general assignment reporter and anchor on the 6 p.m. and 11 p.m. newscasts at WVIT-TV, the NBC affiliate in Hartford, CT.

After almost three years in Hartford, Everett moved to Boston and WCVB. Ten years later, he is one of the station's visible anchors. Such high visibility causes him to be recognized in public, but he said he doesn't mind the attention which comes with his career.

"Ninety-nine percent of the people say nice things," he said of his encounters with viewers. "It's part of the territory, and it's something I'm more than willing to endure."

For the past 15 years, Everett has used his celebrity to help raise funds to fight multiple sclerosis, a disease whose debilitating effects have touched him deeply.

Everett's mother was diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1975, and the disease took her life last May. He said more research is necessary to find a cure for a disease which continues to befuddle the world medical community.

"It's a strange disease," he said. "We don't know a whole lot about it. Every year we can raise more money, we increase the chances for finding a cure."

Everett is serving as honorary chairman of this year's MS Walk on April 9, and will help kick off the day's festivities at the Hatch Shell in Boston in addition to working on the event's public relations committee.

Now that he is in a high-visibility position as co-anchor of the 5:30 news, Everett hopes to raise awareness for cancer research for well. His 5-year-old niece, Lydia, lost a valiant battle with the disease two years ago. Everett said he was forever changed by the experience.

"Lydia was an angel in my mind," he said. "She had a serenity about her, even while she endured horrific pain. Her courage had a big impact on my life and my wife's life. Those kind of events give you some perspective."

Everett said his job also gives him perspective, as he gets to meet people from all walks of life. Those interactions, combined with the excitement of covering events as they happen, make the commute to Needham worthwhile.

"I like being out every day," he said. "The job is different every day, and you never know what you're going to cover."

While Everett is comfortable with the recognition which comes with his job, it's been something his young son has had to become accustomed to.

"I was with Alexander one day and someone recognized me and we talked for a minute," he said. "Afterward, Alexander said 'Daddy, it's not fair that you're famous. He's at the age now where kids will say 'I saw your dad on TV' and things like that. He's getting used to it, though."

Because of the omnipotence of television as an entertainment medium, Everett said it is sometimes difficult to assuage people of the notion that on-air personalities are just like everyone else.

"To a lot of people, there's this mystery to television," he said. "But the people on TV are real people. This just happens to be my job. In this celebrity culture, people are recognized for gaining a certain amount of fame. What's really worthy of recognition is being a good father, a good citizen, and a good husband. Those are the things I strive to be."

Question of the Week

With former advisory committee member Leland H. Jenkins, planning board member Robert Sturdy and former selectman Michael H. Sullivan vying for the selectman's seat being vacated by Diane Sullivan — the selectman's race in this year's April 8 town election promises to be a hotly contested one.

Incumbents, Agnes McCann, Patience Towle and Carol Riley are joined by challenger Lance Norris as candidates for three seats on the board of library trustees.

And Chris Ford and Randy Patterson are seeking John O'Toole's planning board seat. O'Toole is not seeking reelection.

So in keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to local candidates. In the past we have limited the Question to the candidates for contested seats but again this year we'll make an exception for the two citizens running unopposed for two open seats on the school committee. With so much in the news about special education, MCAS tests and the school building project, we think our readers would be well served by knowing what Chartis Langmaid Tebbetts and Richard Flynn have to say.

All candidates — opposed or unopposed — who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 250 words — and must be received by 2 p.m. Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

The following are the first Questions of the Week:

For selectman candidates: What's your stand on the $40 million school project?

For school committee candidates: What are the benefits and/or drawbacks to putting school maintenance under the town umbrella?

For planning board candidates: Town meeting will be asked to support extending the highway business district to set the stage for expansion of Cohasset Plaza. Where do you stand on the issue?

For candidates for library trustee: At the new Hingham Town Hall, the town offices share the same building with the senior center, school department, police station and recreation center. If the library project at the old Osgood School goes forward — what other uses at the site would be compatible with the library?

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com, by fax at 741-2931 or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St. in Hingham Square by 2 p.m. Monday. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street.

We will also publish a candidates' corner weekly but will be limited to a few lines (about 100 words) from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like. We're interested in hearing from any write-in candidates for the board of health, recreation commission and housing authority.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens who are not seeking election.

Candidates are encouraged to advertise their campaigns in the Mariner. For information about deadlines and cost of political advertisements, please contact Bill Murphy at 781-837-4559.

If you have any questions, call Mary Ford at 741-2933.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Osgood playground

MR. MARK HADDAD
TOWN MANAGER

We are writing to you because we want to let you know our concerns for the additional uses of the Osgood School.

It has come to our attention that the Cohasset Police Department has proposed a plan to move the existing station to the remaining space not used by the proposed library at the Osgood School. We have also been told that the police department is looking to triple the size of their existing space on Elm Street. In hand with this plan, the current playground would be destroyed, and this is why we are writing to you.

Cohasset is very limited in the playgrounds it has to offer its below school-age children population. There are three playgrounds that we know; the South Shore Community Center, the new Osgood, and the old Osgood. Open play (meaning anytime) is restricted from the public at two of the three playgrounds. School is in session during the week from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Community Center and from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. at the new Osgood. This leaves one playground for the younger children of Cohasset to play at during the day.

Living across the street from the playground, we are able to monitor its use more than anyone. Many parents meet there for playgroups and organized sports activities. It is a very bustling place during the day!

Yes, there are liability issues with the playground in its current form, but a little refurbishment could really make it a safer place. Unlike Cohasset, Scituate, Hull and Hingham all have extensive public playgrounds for their children. We believe we deserve the same and want to help save our only public playground in our town.

In conclusion, the existing old Osgood playground is an asset to the town that should not be destroyed. When coupled with the new library, the playground would be enjoyed by even more of Cohasset's residents. As neighbors, we want to do what we can to ensure that the playground is kept, refurbished and enjoyed by Cohasset residents for many years to come. Whether it be a signed petition from residents or whatever, please let us know what we need to do to preserve this treasure!

Barking up wrong tree

TO THE EDITOR:

Are humans getting a ruff deal on prescription drugs? Do Fido and Fluffy get a better deal?

The Feb. 24 article in the Cohasset Marinermentions a "study" that claims dogs and cats pay less for the same drug as humans. Out of 37,000 prescription drug projects in the marketplace, the study could only find two drugs with identical formulation and dosage for both humans and animals. Is this study barking up the wrong tree?

The American Veterinary Medical Association (AMVA), in a 1999 letter to Rep. Henry Waxman (D-CA) pointed out the very weak grounds for a study, stressing the differences between developing drugs for humans and developing drugs for animals. The AVMA stated "that all drugs are developed for human use first as this is the biggest market. If in the course of development, substantial animal benefits are discovered, then the drug may be further developed for animal use, piggy-backing on the work already done for the human drug. This significantly reduces the sunken costs in the development of a veterinary drug and therefore allows it to be sold for less".

Both people and pets benefit from research and development, a projected $26.4 billion this year. It takes an average of 12-15 years and half a billion dollars to develop a safe and effective drug for humans. The Animal Health Institute estimates that the average animal-only drug requires $20 million in research and development while human drug research and development costs average close to $500 million.

The benefit of pharmaceuticals to humans is much higher than for companion animals. The law requires much stronger scientific analysis of each drug and its side effects than for dogs. Liability costs add to the higher costs to reflect this investment in safety.

The pets vs. people comparison is one of the arguments doggedly propounded by critics of the pharmaceutical industry as they try to advance their pet goal of price controls which would put both people and pets in the doghouse.

Instead of price controls, we should be working toward universal healthcare.

Low-flush toilets

TO THE EDITOR:

Want to make the world a better place? Read on and be inspired to action!

Calls and letters to Congress complaining about low-flush toilets far exceed the number of letters and calls about Chinese spying, balancing the budget, saving Social Security and other matters of less compelling concern.

The only low-flush toilets that work well are very expensive and are usually pressure assisted models, but most require two or more flushes to complete the job, thus using more water than the old-fashioned johns that have been legislated against.

The asininity of low-flow toilets was foisted on the public by an amendment to the 1992 Energy Policy act, requiring all new toilets manufactured after 1994 to be limited to 1.6 gallons per flush, less than half that of previous "standard" toilets. No wonder there is a brisk trade in smuggled toilets from Canada; no nonsense full-flush jobs.

Fortunately, US Rep. Joe Kindlenberg and 97 co-sponsors have introduced the Plumbing Standards Improvement Act to repeal the low-flush mandate, and save the nation from perverted environmentalism.

So write your Congressman demanding support for this bill, and also request that support for full-flush be incorporated into the platforms of mainstream political parties.

Once effective address to this matter is completed, Congress can relax and move on to matters like national security, the budget, the trade imbalance and undoing the give-aways to Red China.

Primary perspective

TO THE EDITOR:

With John McCain's momentum being all the rage in the press, I'm surprised that there is so little coverage of the Democratic Party strategy of asking core Democrats to vote for him in the primary, then for Gore in the general election. When more Democrats than Republicans vote in a Republican primary, as was the case in Michigan, something is afoot.

And, indeed, in a recent article in the Washington Times, there is a quote from Michigan State Democrat Representative LeMar Lemmons III, "although it is our sincere belief that McCain is not going to get the nomination, we want him to weaken Bush. We'd like to see a nice big fight between the two of them, where they spend as much money as possible and defile each other's character." Apparently only the core Democrats are being asked by their leaders to vote in the Republican primaries, so as not to "mess with the group that may end up voting for McCain if he gets the nomination."

Frankly, I think the media's love affair with McCain will vanish if he is actually the Republican nominee. Since 90 percent of the members of the media vote Democratic, it is unlikely that the media will support McCain over Gore, and we will soon learn of McCain's shortcomings and Gore's strengths, just as we have been seeing Bush in a negative light over the past months.. Personally, I think that the Democratic Party's coordinated effort to influence the Republican Party's primaries is a serious attack on our democratic institutions, and should be a major news story. It also needs to be considered by Republicans as they vote in their primaries. Could there actually be a "vast, left-wing conspiracy"?

Proposal to finance new library backed

"If town meeting approves this article, it will authorize the sale of the Pratt library," Haddad said. "We've been trying to come up with a way to pay for the new library without increasing the tax rate over Proposition 2 1/2. Mike [Buckley] and I are very assured this will work."

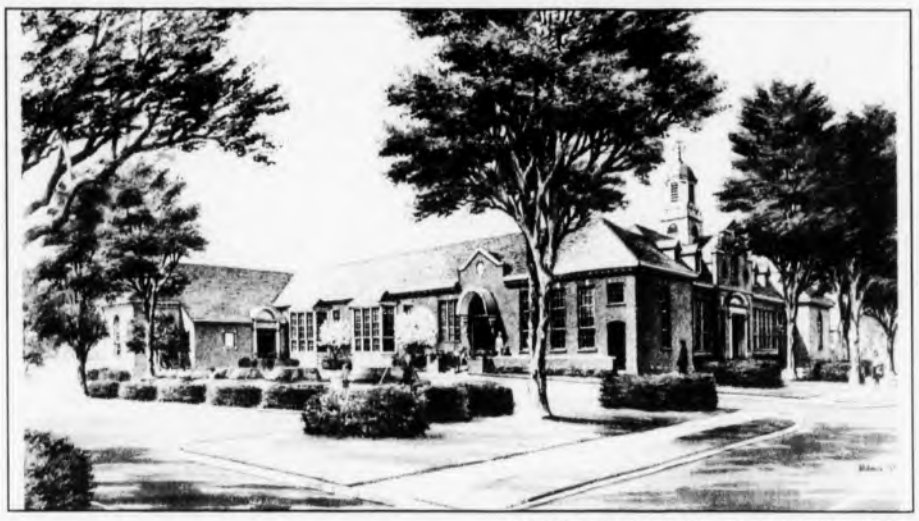
Selectman Ronnie McMorris asked Towle if the library trustees would still go forward with an Osgood library without the sale of the Pratt library, which has been mentioned in the past as a possible home for senior housing or a police station.

Towle said she feels the old Osgood school is ideally suited for the new library, but said a new financing plan would have to be developed if town meeting voters elect not to sell the Pratt library.

"I think it's a wonderful $3 million library, and it's practically free," she said. "Without the sale of the Pratt library, we'd have to go back to the drawing board. It's our opinion that it has no use as a public building. It's multi-level and there's no parking."

No money is currently available at the state level for library construction grants, but Evans said the Mass. Board of Library Commissioners is beginning a round of grant applications in the expectation of money becoming available in the future.

"We know what we'll get when the money becomes available," Evans said. "There are no towns on any list to get state funding, but 70 communities are expected to participate. Cohasset is the most advanced in the process, because we have completed construction drawings. That should give us a huge advantage to get to the top of the list."



ARCHITECT RENDERINGS BY BURT HILL KOSAR RITTELMANN ASSOCIATES

The proposed new library would have a 25-car parking lot where the 1950 wing is now.

Towle said applications are expected to be due in September. Because the fall town meeting is not until later, Towle said the plan would have to be approved at the March 25 town meeting to be included in the grant process. Evans said grant awards are expected to be announced next February, with construction to last eight to 10 months.

Evans and Towle showed selectmen the completed construction drawings for the proposed Osgood library, which would be approximately 15,000 square feet.

Among the proposed amenities are a large reading room, a children's room with low book stacks and computers, built-in wiring and two meetings rooms, one which could accommodate up to 60 people.

Among the architectural features are a rotunda with built-in skylight near the lobby and a restored cupola. Parking would also be provided for 25 cars.

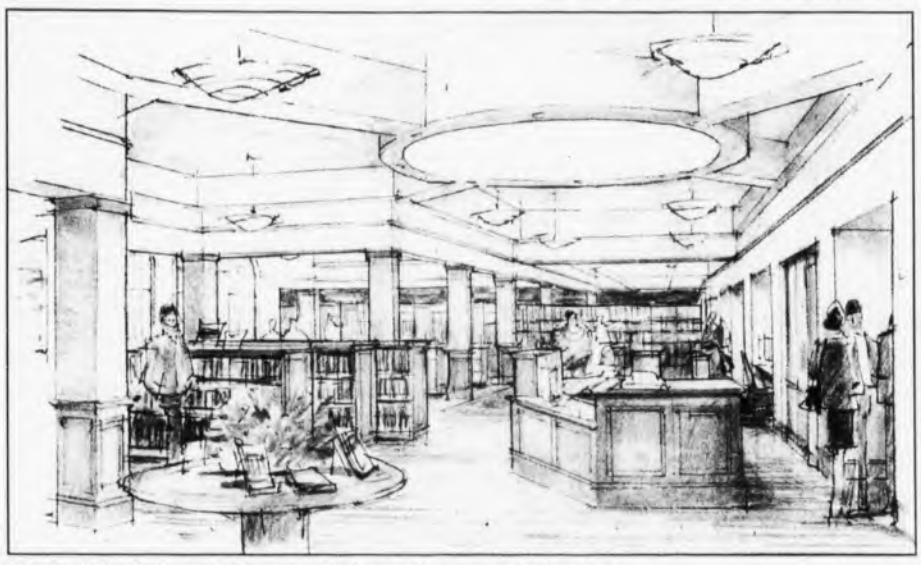
"This plan solves the parking problem at the current library and preserves the old Osgood school," said selectman Fred Koed. "I think it's great."

Fellow selectman Diane Sullivan wasn't in favor of using the sale of the Pratt library as a method to offset the cost of the new library.

"When we were going to sell Osgood, it was going to go toward senior housing," she said. "I don't think we should say 'You can't have the new library unless you do this' [sell the Pratt library]."

Selectman Thomas Callahan said the reluctance to sell Osgood should not stop the town from selling the Pratt library.

"We committed to sell the old Osgood to defray the costs of the new Osgood school, but it didn't happen," Callahan said. "We made a commitment to sell something."



The circulation desk, new books and audio-visual media areas under the rotunda.

What's wrong with this marriage?

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I don't get it.

For millennia, people like Dear Abby and Dr. Laura have been exhorting us that getting married first is the righteous thing to do.

So Rick Rockwell gets down on one knee and proposes to Darva Conger and they get married on TV before some 23 million viewers and what happens?

They get yelled at, that's what.

In fact, the yelling got so loud last week that the Fox Television Network announced it is giving up the promotion of marriage, at least the kind that locates a multimillionaire husband for a blushing bride.

In case you haven't been reading the tabloids lately, Rick and Darva met and entered the state of wedded bliss a few minutes later on a Fox program called "Who Wants to Marry a Multimillionaire."

Rick selected Darva from a volunteer harem of 50 eager candidates and they left on their honeymoon (a Caribbean cruise) right there in full view of the largest Nielsen rating of the week.

But even before they had time to know each other in the Biblical sense, their marriage, like so many others, began falling apart.

But even before they had time to know each other in the Biblical sense, their marriage, like so many others, began falling apart.

Rick, who was billed as a real estate developer and former stand-up comedian who once played the Comedy Connection in Boston, may not have been all that he claimed to be.

Fox said the network had checked his net worth and found it to be at least $2 million but even that seemed to come as a surprise to his mother.

"The last car I saw him drive was a Volkswagen," she said.

Then a web site called "TheSmokingGun.com" came up with the information that a woman named Deborah Goyne had in 1991 obtained a restraining order against Rick after he threatened to kill her when she tried to break up with him.

"I am filing this restraining order be because I have lived with and known Rick for over a year and a half (and) it is my belief that his elevator doesn't go all the way to the top floor," she said.

Another woman, Gina Ord, called a San Diego radio station to say that Rick had confessed his love for her just hours before his on air wedding to Darva.

Furthermore, a check of Central Casting showed that his big break in the entertainment world was a bit part in "Attack of the Killer Tomatoes," which didn't win any Academy Awards to my recollection.

Even the National Organization of Women, which has taken no firm stand on the sanctity of marriage, had something to say about the first "wedding of the millennium."

"It portrayed the most retro and regressive stereotypes of women and men," sniffed Pat Ireland, the NOW president.

"It was women competing for a man based on their looks and charm and all they needed to know about him was his money.

"When I saw it, my next question was: 'How long is it before they're going to want to show the honeymoon?'"

By the time Darva and Rick returned from their (untelevised) honeymoon, Fox had sworn off such "reality programming." Darva was going for an annulment, Rick was circling the wagons around his 1,200 square foot Encinitas, Calif., estate.

And the betting was that, despite the little bump in the road, marriage as an institution will survive.

March 7 primary.

"First, there's been a gradual increase in the number of unenrolled voters in the last 20 years," McCarthy said. "1990 was the first time unenrolled voters outnumbered Democrats and they've been growing. Secondly, you have the McCain phenomenon. And I've talked to a lot of people who want to be in a position where their vote could matter the most. Which ever race is closer, that's where people want to vote."

Due in large part to interest in the close Republican race between Bush and McCain, 21,759 Massachusetts voters have switched their voter registration from Democrat to unenrolled as of Tuesday, according to McCarthy. Another 4,103 voters have switched from Democrat to Republican, and 2,794 have switched from unenrolled to Republican.

The interest in her party's primary invigorates state Republican vice-chairwoman Polly Logan of Cohasset, who said this year's primary should be a departure from past primaries which generated little fanfare.

"This is exciting, because there's been so much apathy in voting," Logan said. "I believe in primary fights, because they get people out. I know a great many of people in town who were for Bush and are now for McCain. I think there's going to be a tremendous turnout."

In Hingham, Town Clerk Eileen McCracken said 125 Democrats had switched to unenrolled as of the Feb. 16 primary registration deadline. McCracken said no Republicans had changed their affiliation to unenrolled.

Hingham Democratic Committee chairman Tim White said the rush to vote in the Republican primary can only be attributed to McCain. White said McCain's appeal is unique, because he does not fit the mold of a candidate who normally attracts unenrolled voters.

"I find it fascinating because unenrolled voters tend to be more liberal on social issues than conservative Republicans and Sen. McCain is a conservative Republican," White said. "I think people find his life story appealing, the fact that he was a POW in Vietnam and won a Profile in Courage Award on campaign finance reform. He adds a different dimension to the field of Republican candidates that makes him appeal to independent voters."

Logan went to New Hampshire to drum up support for Bush in the Granite State's Feb. 6 Republican primary. She said she noticed renewed interest in the candidates among the under-30 crowd.

"When I went to New Hampshire, I saw a lot of young people out to see McCain, Bush, and even Steve Forbes," Logan said. "It was great to see all those young people getting involved in politics."

Logan expects the excitement generated in New Hampshire to carry over into the Massachusetts primaries on March 7. She said those hoping to replace outgoing state senator Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset) will likely take advantage of the large number of voters expected to vote at area polling places.

"Once New Hampshire exploded, the interest in the races really grew nationwide," she said. "I think the primary could be as big as the regular election. I anticipate a whole parade of signs for the different presidential candidates as well as the candidates running for Mary Jeanette's seat."

Train would kill 'enchanted villages'

LOCAL VIEW

JIM WATSON

As is probably the case with many of you, my attitude towards the Greenbush rail restoration has been somewhat 'wait and see.' This was before I delved into the facts surrounding this project. For those of you who favor the train to take the kids to Boston to see the "Enchanted Village" at Christmas, please reconsider. The "Enchanted Village" ain't no more and this train would mean the demise of three other enchanted villages, this time, non-fictionally.

This proposed train would pass within six feet of some people's homes. This distance is unprecedented. For its length, the train tracks will have more grade crossings than any other rail line in the United States. The MBTA is trying to push the litigation through without an Army Corps of Engineers study on the environmental impact because they are perfectly aware that the project is an environmental disaster. Kevin O'Keeffe's report exposes the train for the polluter that it is, and details many negative factors surrounding it. Copies are also available at Cohasset Hardware and at www.treq.org.

My fundamental concern with this project is that it will forever change the complexion and uniqueness of these three towns. I have so many people tell me that when the train came into their towns, the town was never the same. Please understand that I am fully in favor of improving the transportation to the city from this area, but the T has done no comprehensive studies for alternatives to this rail plan. The reason for this is that the money is on the table and the politicians need to spend it.

The MBTA basically tried to blackmail the Hingham Selectmen into a March 1 decision on this issue and their reputation for many tactics such as these are well-documented. The whole picture looks like a big piece of bad business to me.

Consider the people driving this project: Paul Cellucci, who entered office carrying a couple hundred thousand dollars in personal debt; (How many people do you know put their kid's education on MasterCard?); Kevin Sullivan, the Transportation Secretary, who, in a talk the other evening did nothing but champion Paul Cellucci and Jane Swift and state what a 'marvel' the Big Dig is; (Just check with Walter Hammond, the former Mayor of Quincy, to find out what a 'marvel' it actually has been.); and, of course, James "on-budget-on-time" Kerasiotes.

Would any of you do a personal business deal with any of them?

A citizen's immediate concern should be the impact this project will have on the town's infrastructure: schools, roads, water, sewer, etc. In this scenario, every zoning by-law is arbitrated to the max to achieve utmost development. I think this will be overwhelming to us.

Contrary to what one might think, becoming a train destination markedly increases local traffic. Six hundred parking spots in North Scituate and 1,100 more along the North River watershed? They must be kidding! Rep. Hynes of Marshfield is very happy to gain access to the T without it touching his town; and is not bothered at all by making Scituate Marshfield's parking lot.

The Mayor of Weymouth favors the train and says we need to be less parochial in our thinking. He goes on to say that Weymouth is not Hingham or Scituate — my point exactly. How about running the line as far as the old ammo dump, west of Hingham Square, and hubbing it there, meeting Weymouth's needs? Commuters could easily find their way there if they wanted to take the train.

In the case of Marshfield, run some express buses up Route 3, but don't dissect these three beautiful towns in the process.

My feeling is, that deep down people feel this proposal by this group of politicians, which will impact this area so severely, is unsatisfactory. I urge you, a citizen, to take part in trying to preserve this beautiful town. So many people tell me, many of them commuters, that the slight remoteness of this area is the reason they live here.

By calling or writing, you as a citizen, need to rally our selectmen to back the Hingham (and Scituate) boards at their upcoming meetings with the Army Corps. The Hingham Board is going through the mitigation process (it would be dumb not to) while steadfastly opposing the train.

Transportation is about to go through the same transition that knee surgery did 20 years ago, eliminating the scars. Hopefully, we as an area won't settle for the last installation of an archaic, polluting mode of transportation and will demand another solution.

I have a sense that if we were to unite as a three-town group, we might be able to keep this archaic, politically-driven, polluting, monstrosity out of here. Thank you for your consideration on this vital matter.

Strong finish for Skippers

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High boys basketball team found consolation in its final game of the season.

The Skippers came from behind in the consolation game of the second annual South Shore Tournament to defeat Marshfield, 59-50, on Feb. 23 in Hingham.

In the championship game, Norwell completed their 20-0 season with an 83-61 win over Hingham. The Clippers were the champions in the first year of the tournament.

Marshfield jumped out to a 16-1 lead, but the Skippers fought back to win the game.

"This is a great way to finish," said Cohasset coach Ron Ford. "This team faced a lot of adversity and never quit, and I'm proud to coach them."

Kevin Andrews led the way for the Skippers with 17 points, while TJ Bilodeau and Erik Shea has a 11 apiece.

Marshfield's Mike Wholey had 16 points for the Rams, while senior center Scott Norton finished with 12 and John Copponi had 11.

In the first round game, the Skippers lost to Norwell, 80-66.

Blue Hill rows to win in 20th Snow Row

By Mike Hardman
STAFF WRITER

Ed McCabe took a good look at his crew before the start of the 20th Annual Snow Row.

And then they took a good look at each other.

"We practiced at night all winter long," said McCabe with a laugh. "Half of these guys didn't know what the other guys looked like until the morning."

McCabe put an adult crew together to compete in the annual race at Hull Gut on Saturday and they ended up winning the event in a time of 33:10 over the 3 3/4 mile course in the Pilot Gig Open competition. The triangular course went through Hull and Hingham Bays.

Saquish was second, in 33:20, followed by the Mike Jenness, Sr., 33:05.

As three of the boats made their way to the finish line, the Blue Hill was able to edge out the field for the victory.

For McCabe, who is the Maritime Director at Hull Lifesaving, it was special to see all of the work that his crew put in pay off in the victory.

"The only time we could get together was after work in the city," said McCabe. "We started in late in October after the sun went down. Twice a week all winter we rowed together in the city. Three of guys had never raced or rowed together until this fall. It was their first really competitive experience and let's see if they come back."

The crew was based out of the Naval yard in Charlestown where the boat was built under the direction of boat builder Reuben Smith, working with juveniles in the job training program. The boat was commissioned on Nov. 4 out of the Charlestown Navy Yard and is a state of the art vessel, according to McCabe.

"One of their jobs was to build this thing," said McCabe. "In this country, it is arguable the state of the art."

Smith took part in the race on one of the crews, while the young boat builders worked as timers in the race.

"It's great to work with these kids and to see the boat in the water," said Smith. "It was a great race."

As far as the race strategy went, the Blue Hill crew had a "little secret weapon."

"We had the last 100 yard strokes that we have been practicing all year," said McCabe, whose team used a church as their marking for the final stretch.

If you happened upon Hull Gut in the drizzle and fog of Saturday morning, you could have easily imagined that you were back in time. The boats and their crews presented a touch of the past on the sea.

The race started 20 years ago when McCabe and some friends got four boats and put them into the water on a cold day.

"We decided that the lifesavers didn't always do their rescues when the weather was great in the summer," he said.

Over the year's the event has become one of the premier rowing events in the Northeast. This year's race drew a women's team from Cornwall, England, who used the Mike Jenness Sr. boat, which was loaned to them by the Saquish racing team out of Plymouth.

The two groups have taken part in a rowing exchange program. The local team went over to Cornwall to take part in a race they were having and to learn more about how to build the boats and rowing techniques.

"There was a phenomenal field," said McCabe. "There was the Saquish team, the defending champions, the women's crew from Cornwall was unbelievable. If we had faltered, they would have been all over us."

"The small boats did some phenomenal stuff. There was a lot of good stuff going on out there."

Senior grapplers end fine season

By Andrew Mahoney
STAFF WRITER

The Cohasset High wrestling team wrapped up its season last weekend, send three wrestlers to All-States. Despite wrestling well, all three lost their first two matches and did not place. Competing for the Skippers were Chris Pratt at 125, Liam O'Donnell at 160 and Kevin DeVito at 171.

One week earlier, Pratt finished third in the Div. 3 State finals, while O'Donnell and DeVito took fourth.

"Pratt lost to the finalist and the third place finisher," said Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney. "Those were both tough matches. It was just an unlucky draw. O'Donnell lost his first match, then had to face the No. 1 seed. He wrestled well. The kids beat him on points. DeVito lost 4-2 to a finalist. He was winning his second match, but then he got caught and was pinned."

Sweeney was grateful for the role all three played in the Skippers season, along with fellow senior Joe Carbone, who was 20-8 heading before he was injured and done for the year.

"The seniors paced us all season," said Sweeney, whose team went 9-12-1 this year. "They gave us a shot at .500, right up until Carbone got hurt."

It was a breakthrough season for the Norwell High wrestling team.

"In each tournament we entered, we got the highest number of points we've ever had," said Norwell coach Jim Sullivan.

Those accomplishments carried all the way to the All-States, where both Mike Robertson and Steve Mott performed admirably. Wrestling at 140, Robertson lost his first match of the day at 189, then bounced back to win his second match by pin. In his third match, he put up a good fight but lost 8-5. The top six in each class qualify for New Englands.

"He placed eighth and came very close to making New Englands," said Sullivan. "I'm very proud of how he did."

Mott had a tough draw a 189, losing to the eventual winner in his first match and the third place finisher in his second match.

For Robertson, it was an end to a special career. He finished with the third most victories ever by a Norwell wrestler, behind only Roger Carron and Brett Chico. He is the all-time place winner in tournaments. Mott had a successful career as well ranking in the top 10 for all time wins by a Norwell wrestler.

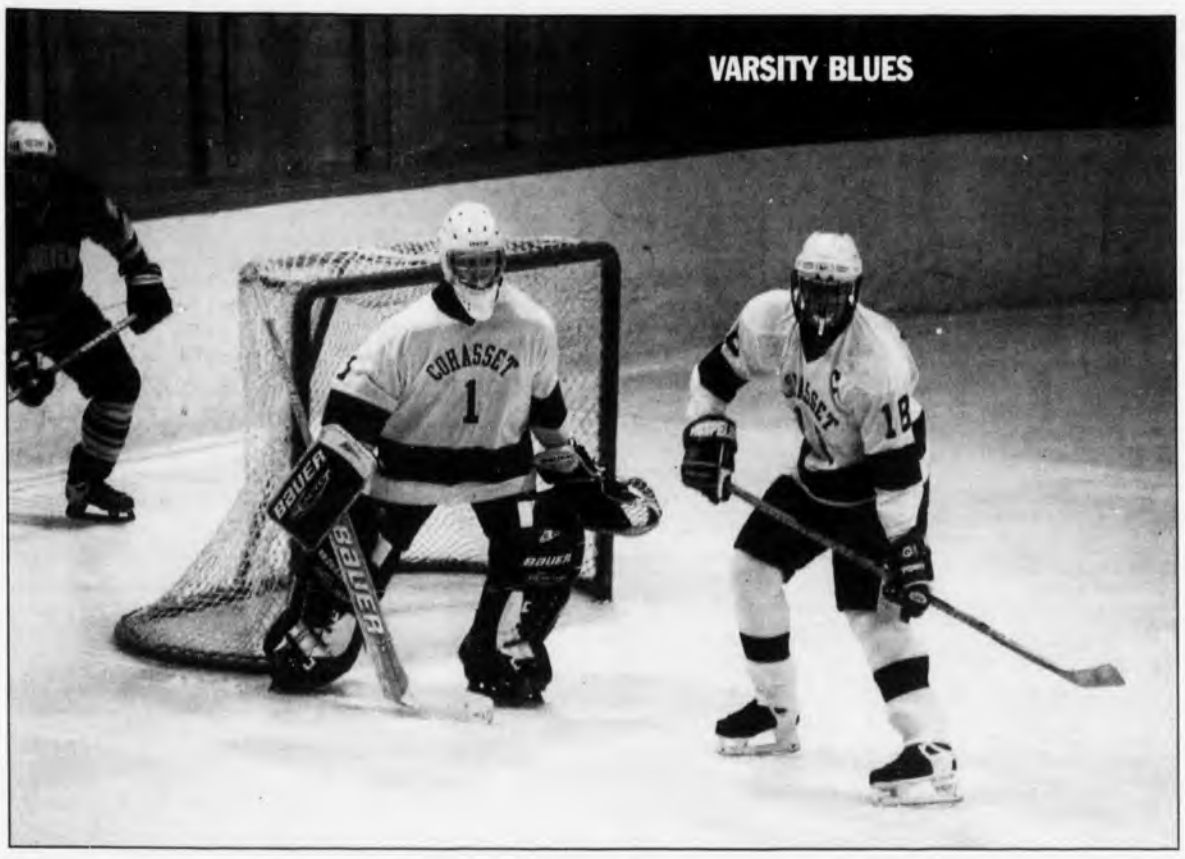
Ed McCabe of the Hull Lifesaving Museum throws his hands into the air after guiding the Blue Hill to victory in the race.



The Cohasset High hockey team returned to the varsity level this season, and there was plenty of exciting action. Top, goalie Steve Mikkanen and co-captain Bill Good defend the Skippers' net. Bottom left sophomore Chris Caron follows the action down the ice, and Good (18) and Ken Portanovas (5) position themselves for the face-off.

School bus passes state inspection

Supt. Edward Malvey said state police inspected the school bus involved in an accident Friday, Feb. 18 and determined there was no bald tire.

"He said there was plenty of tread on the tire," Malvey said about the Feb. 23 inspection.

Cohasset police asked state police to inspect the town-owned school bus that hit two trees head on when it was going around the corner at 260 Jerusalem Road in slippery conditions. Police said the tire on the front driver's side was bald..

State Trooper Paul Vanchek inspected the bus and said the accident was due to poor road conditions.

"I came down and checked all of the components on the bus," Vanchek said. "I didn't find any bald tire. The accident was due to ice coverage and snowy roads."

Malvey said the school bus fleet was inspected by state police in December and is scheduled for another inspection in March.

The four children on board the bus at the time of the accident were not injured. The driver was treated and released at South Shore Hospital.

Man arrested following housebreak

Officers, responding to an alarm at 318 Forest Ave., at about 10 a.m. Feb. 23 observed a broken pane of glass in the back door and determined the house had been broken into, Sgt. Robert Jackson said.

Following an investigation, it was determined that a pearl necklace valued at $1,500 was missing, police said.

"Subsequent investigation by Det. Greg Lennon led to the arrest of Nichols Parisi, 17, 165 Nantasket Ave., Hull," Jackson said.

Parisi was arraigned on charges of breaking & entering in the daytime with intent to commit a felony and conspiracy. A plea of not guilty was entered on his behalf, Jackson said. A pre-trial hearing is slated for May 11.

Police are seeking a warrant for the arrest Brian P. Michaels, 30, 100 Nantasket Ave., Hull, whom they believe was also involved in the incident.

SCHOOL NOTEBOOK

People's Choice art awards

The art works of Nicole Durant and Alex Dedes were voted the People's Choice this year in the second annual People's Choice Art award recently held at the Cohasset Middle/High School. Durant's untitled watercolor depicts a nature scene with a golden retriever and Dedes' detailed facial self-portrait as a child was done in pencil.

More than 25 students entered their best art. The winners in the two categories (seventh to ninth grade and 10th to 12th grade) received cash awards, and their works will be professionally readied for hanging as part of the permanent collection of art in the library art area of the school.

Beyond encouraging the artist side of all students the members of the library and art staff wanted to bring all members of the community into this activity; that's why all students, staff and parents were encouraged to vote for their favorites, and just under 300 people cast their votes on Feb. 9 for the entries in this the second annual People's Choice Art Awards.

Congratulations to all who entered.

Lunch program in the black popular. We do hand-made meatball subs. We keep introducing new things and see what the kids like."

One of the additions to this year's food service program was the brainchild of middle high school principal Curtis Collins. To generate additional revenue, Collins suggested a snack bar be opened after school for students who have after school activities.

The idea has worked and a snack bar has also been instituted at Deer Hill. At the snack bars, students can buy staples of the childhood diet such as chips, candy bars, and sodas.

Lunches are much more healthy, and Geyer said she's been surprised by the reaction of parents to some of the menu items.

"I remember the shocked looks on some of the parents faces when we were cutting turkeys because they were surprised we used real turkey," Geyer laughed. "I don't know what the perception is or what the parents had for lunch when they were in school, but we try to put out healthy, good-tasting foods."

Though the food service deficit has been eradicated and next year's subsidy removed, Malvey said the program's financial situation can change rapidly.

"We're in good shape right now, but we understand things can change," Malvey said. "The program has peaks and valleys. We could lose some sales as we get closer to summer because the seniors can go off-campus."

While the financial status of the program may vary with the seasons, Geyer said one aspect of school lunches will likely remain unchanged.

"Papa Gino's pizza will always be the most popular thing we do," she said.

IT'S HAPPENING

Cohasset kitchen tour set for April 7

It has a little of everything including the kitchen sink. Five unique Cohasset homes, designer fabrics, lush floral arrangements, elegant table settings and tempting taste treats prepared by some of the area's best-loved caterers and it's all for your enjoyment as part of the South Shore Community Center's Fourth Annual Kitchen Tour, from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m., Friday, April 7.

As individual as their owners, each of this year's five kitchens reflects the vast and varied options available to today's homeowner when planning or decorating a kitchen, as well as the individual style which pervades today's entertaining.

Starting at Cohasset's landmark Lightkeeper's Residence — which serves as both respite spot and tour boutique — the tour winds along Cohasset's coast and village. Tour highlights include a Cohasset Golf Club course-side home, a unique village antique and a Newport cottage-style home with natural-set pool just beyond the kitchen.

Adding to the interest of the architectural details and personal interior design styles of the five homeowners will be the artistry of area design professionals, who will offer up table settings in the kitchens and dining rooms of each home.

And for the tour-goer who is left craving a little something to whet her pallet, each home as well as the Lightkeeper's Residence will feature catered refreshments.

With all homes open throughout the day, this unique tour can be seen on an individualized schedule. Attendees can take part of the tour, say, in the morning and complete the day after lunch.

Advance tickets are $20 through Friday, March 31, and $25 per person beginning Monday, April 3, through the day of the tour. Tickets may be purchased at the Community Center or by calling (781)383-0088. Ticket sales are limited, so advance purchase is suggested.

Funds from Kitchen Tour 2000 will be used to support the programs of the South Shore Community Center. The center, at 3 North Main St., Cohasset, is a non—profit organization founded nearly 60 years ago. It is dedicated to a wide range of educational and enrichment programs for infants to seniors.

For more information about the kitchen tour or any of the center's courses, workshops or ongoing programs, call (781) 383-0088.

Internet safeguards

"Safe in Cyberspace: Preparing Parents and Children for the Internet" will be the topic of a lecture by David Greenfield, Ph.D., nationally renowned psychologist and author of "Virtual Addiction," which will take place Monday, March 6, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. at St. Anthony Parish Center, 10 Summer St.

Dr. Greenfield is one of the country's leading researchers on the subject of Internet addiction. Copies of Dr. Greenfield's book will be available for purchase. This program is cosponsored by the Cohasset PSO and the Social Service League of Cohasset. For more information, call (781) 383-0771.

The Teen Garage will be open for the following hours, beginning this weekend:

'Arsenic and Old Lace' on stage

The Cohasset Dramatic Club presents "Arsenic and Old Lace" at the Cohasset Town Hall March 10, 11, 17,18, 24 and 25 at 8 p.m., and March 26 at 2 p.m.

Story of Noah

On Sunday, March 5, at 2 p.m., the weather will turn frightful as The Jubilate Choir of St. Stephen's Church performs "100% Chance of Rain." Originally performed in 1972 by the Choristers Guild of Texas, "100% Chance of Rain" is the story of Noah's struggles and triumphs. Through song and dialogue, the story of the great flood unfolds. With rousing musical numbers such as "Gonna Build an Ark" and "The Admirable Admiral," Noah and his family build the Ark and survive the flood. The beautiful ballad "At the Sign of the Rainbow" fulfills God's promise and tells us we are all part of God's Rainbow. Music directors are Fred Guzasky and Linda DeRosa-Coakley.

A free-will offering will be taken, and the children will determine which organization will be the recipient.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For more information, call the church office at 383-1083.

'Torch Mistress'

The South Shore Art Center's Le Bistro Chantant series of Saturday night performances comes to a rousing conclusion at 8 p.m., March 11, with 'Torch Mistress' Suzy William's performance of songs "with a wicked look at longing."

With accordionist Evan Harlan, Williams will perform tunes by Henry Mancini, Erik Trayhorn, Charlie Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Kurt Weill and Langston Hughes as well as original compositions. The performance will also include Film Noir-type numbers (such as "The Heel" and "Ain't That Just Like a Man"), Romanian Gypsy music, Bach, Rimsky-Korsakov and songs sung in French and Italian. L.A. Weekly recommended Williams and her accompanist as "the Cabaret Torch Sizzlers."

Williams' March 11 performance will take place in the bistro setting of the South Shore Art Center. Guests can enjoy the concert while sipping French wine amidst the current exhibition at the Bancroft Gallery.

For reservations or more information call 383-2787.

Viola, piano concert

As part of its "Sunday Concert Series," St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset is presenting Boston Symphony violist Michael Zaretsky and pianist Xak Bjerken in a recital Sunday, March 12, at 3 p.m. Zaretsky is a graduate of the Moscow State Conservatory, was principal violist of the Jerusalem Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra in Israel, and is presently a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He also is on the faculty of the Longy School of Music. Pianist Xak Bjerken has performed at the Kennedy Center, was artistic director for the Messiaen festival and is on the faculty of Cornell University. He has recorded "Black Snow," a collection of Russian works, along with Zaretsky. Formed are works by Glinka, the local Jakov Jakoulov, Schumann and Brahms.

Donations will be accepted.

The church is located at 16 Highland Ave. in Cohasset, is handicap accessible, and plenty of parking is available in the nearby village lot. For information, call 397-0963.

Cohasset's 'idea guy'

Buckley poised to become new director of finance

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

His title may be 'Town Accountant', but Mike Buckley does far more than simply balancing the town's books.

Buckley has served as Cohasset's town accountant for 7-1/2 years. He has seen his position increase in importance over the years, becoming one of the leading figures in Town Hall.

"I'm kind of the town manager's and selectmen's troubleshooter," Buckley said in describing his unique role. "I'm the town accountant, but I'm also responsible for the computers in Town Hall, tracking RTF stickers, just doing whatever needs to be done. I'm supposed to be the 'idea guy', trying to think outside the box."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said Buckley is his right-hand-man.

"When I came here three years ago, Mike had a position as the budget officer and I relied heavily on him. He's got a wealth of knowledge and we constantly bounce ideas off each other. He's like an assistant town manager."

Part of Buckley's expertise as Cohasset's town accountant comes from his intimate knowledge of the town. He grew up in Cohasset and his family's rich legacy in town continues.

"My parents are right up the street and my sister just bought a house in town," he said. "My father, Jack, and his five brothers all live close together on Linden Drive or Forest Avenue. My grandfather was a house builder and he built houses for everyone."

One of Buckley's uncles, Joe Buckley, retired last year as Cohasset's town treasurer/collector. Mike said he loved working so closely with his uncle.

"I never knew my father's father, so he's always been kind of like a grandfather to me," Buckley said of the uncle he affectionately calls Joe Buck. "Working with Joe Buck every day was awesome."

If town meeting approves, Mike Buckley will become the town's first director of finance.

After graduating from Northeastern, the 36-year old Buckley said he 'kind of fell into' being a town accountant in the late 1980s. He served as town accountant in Westport for two years and assistant town accountant in Hingham for two more before coming back to Cohasset.

"I was thinking it would be a temporary thing, but I really enjoy it," he said of municipal accounting. "Being a CPA in wingtips, that isn't me. I couldn't imagine myself as employee number 862."

"He's got a wealth of knowledge and we constantly bounce ideas off each other. He's like an assistant town manager."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Should town meeting voters accept Haddad's proposal to create a director of finance — which is endorsed by selectmen — Buckley will assume even greater responsibility and receive a $7,120 raise to an annual salary of $70,000. Under the proposal, the town treasurer/collector and town assessor would report directly to Buckley instead of Haddad.

"The idea is for Mark [Haddad] and the selectmen to know finance is taken care of," Buckley said. "They can go to one person instead of three and I can make sure all three financial departments are heading in the same direction."

Added responsibility is not likely to deter Buckley, who also works 15-20 hours a week as Pembroke's town accountant. On most days, Buckley heads to Pembroke at 4:30 p.m. for about three hours. On Fridays, when Cohasset Town Hall closes at 1 p.m., he spends a little more time in Pembroke.

Though he works between 55-60 hours per week between both jobs, Buckley has a unique perspective on his heavy workload.

"The way I look at it, I spend the two or three hours I'd have to commute each day working in Pembroke," Buckley said.

Buckley said his work in Pembroke gives him insight and experience he can use in Cohasset.

"As a general rule, the town's are doing the same things at the same time," he said. "The fiscal year is the same. Town meetings come around about the same time. Also, Pembroke had a $33 million school project voted in last year. I can use that experience in this job with our school project."

Haddad said he is impressed by the way Buckley balances both jobs.

"He never hurts one town for the other," Haddad said. "He's just a tremendous, tremendous asset to this town."

When Buckley isn't working, he can usually be found at home in Pembroke with his wife Christine and his three young children, 4-year-old Hannah, 3-year-old Sam, and 2-year-old Adam.

"They're what it's all about," Buckley said of his children. "With three of them, it's hard to go out and do much, but we went to Disney on Ice last weekend. They're still young, though, so they're pretty content to just hang out at home with dad."

When his kids come to Cohasset, Buckley said they're likely to be tagging around with DPW superintendent Harold Litchfield or fire chief Roger Lincoln.

"They love to see Roger's fire trucks and Harold's diggers," Buckley said. "Harold's their idol because of all of his trucks."

Proposed senior housing project faces long odds

Needs a variance to allow multiple dwellings on one lot

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

A proposed five-unit condominium development aimed at senior citizens will need significant zoning relief to become a reality.

Developer Noel Collins wants to build the five units at the old Edison site on North main Street, but the 21,000 square-foot lot he owns is in a single-family residential zone.

To achieve zoning relief, Collins has proposed making the condo units available to only Cohasset residents 55 and older for a period of six months to a year. By making the units available only to the town's seniors, Collins is hoping the zoning board will look favorably upon the project.

After an initial hearing on the proposal last week, zoning board member Barbara Power said the density variance sought by Collins is difficult to attain.

"Multiple-family housing is not permitted in Cohasset except through a variance," Power said. "Variances are extremely hard to get."

Building commissioner Bob Egan said variances for new construction are harder to acquire than special permits for a nonconforming use on an existing property.

"Multiple-family housing is not permitted in Cohasset except through a variance. Variances are extremely hard to get."
Zoning board of appeals member Barbara Power

"A variance is basically asking to be exempted from the law," Egan said. "There are some pretty strict conditions which go along with that. When you're looking to create a non-conforming structure, it's a pretty strict test."

Collins said the units would average 1200 square feet and would all be handicapped-accessible. Plans call for two separate buildings, one of which would have a first-floor garage. While all units would not be located on the first floor, Collins said the buildings would be equipped with a shared elevator.

Should the project be approved, those who buy the condominiums will be able to choose custom-designed floor plans and interiors, according to Collins. He said he expects the units to cost between $250,000 and $350,000.

The zoning board continued the hearing on the senior housing proposal until its April 3 meeting. Collins expects to meet with the planning board, conservation commission, and board of health before returning to the zoning board.

In addition to the density variance, a special permit for the project is needed for construction in a flood plain zone.

Collins said he is looking to compromise with town boards in order to make the project happen.

"I believe there's a market in town for senior housing," he said. "We're more than willing to work with the board to come up with something which is acceptable to everyone."

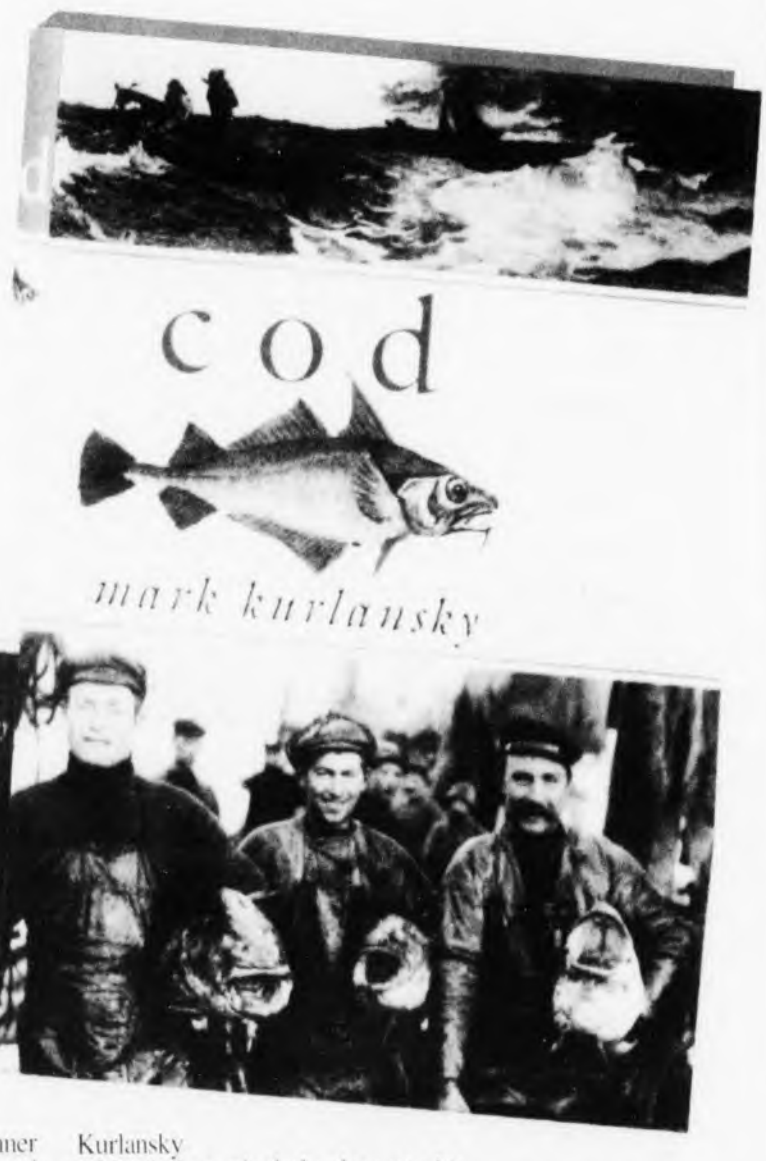
The South Shore Natural Science Center in Norwell will present "Let There be Life — A Celebration of Spring" an exhibit by photographer Pat Daly through March 31.

NSRWA welcomes best-selling author Mark Kurlansky

By Seth Jacobson
STAFF WRITER



is a man who has visited some of the most intriguing places in the world, and he will share some of those experiences with local residents March 8, during a special South Shore Natural Science Center program sponsored by the North and South River Watershed Association.

His name is Mark Kurlansky, 51, the author of four books including his best selling "Cod: A Biography of the Fish That Changed the World.."

Kurlansky will talk about "Cod" and even more about his newest book "The Basque History of The World" — a work focusing on the unique culture of the inhabitants of seven small provinces sandwiched between France and Spain.

"Cod," is the book that put Kurlansky on the map, especially locally. It is the winner of the Glenfiddich 1999 Food and Drink Award for best book and has been on the New York Times Business Best-Seller list and the Boston Globe's Best-Seller list. When he's not writing books, Kurlansky, a New York resident, pens his regular column for Food and Wine magazine.

Kurlansky said he feels particularly close to New England history, as he grew up in Hartford, Conn., and eventually took jobs as a pastry chef at a Nantucket restaurant and worked on various fishing boats in Rhode Island.

"I still have a lot of ties to the area," Kurlansky said.

As to the focus of his presentation at the science center, Kurlansky will speak about the Basque people's maritime history and the overall uniqueness of the culture.

Kurlansky noted the Basque people were essentially the "first cod fishermen," and they were also once an important trading partner with Boston Harbor."

"John Adams was a man who was fairly knowledgeable about the Basques," Kurlansky added. "The Basques are probably the oldest living European culture with the oldest European language. There are about 2.5 million Basques still living in an area the size of New Hampshire," he said.

Kurlansky said the Basque people are mostly situated in the southwest area of France and in the adjacent part of Spain.

"These people were never considered to be French or Spanish," Kurlansky said. "They are a separate culture."

Kurlansky's sums up his book on the Basques. It's a remarkable story about how these people wanted to go out an prosper." The Basques were, and still are "a commercially-minded people," he said.

The show must go on.

But it almost did not.

The Bay Players theater company based in Duxbury has been a force within the community theater industry for 43 years, but lack of funding and theatre space threatened to draw the curtain on the troupe before it could get its 44th season underway.

> The best thing would be if we could get a theater of our own. That's our dream. There's a lot of people here with lot of ideas.
> Bay Players member Janice Neubauer.

Despite the obstacles, the Players are staging a production of "Harvey" and making the best of the smaller theater venues made available to them.

"We still don't have a secure place to put on shows," said Bay Players member Janice Neubauer. "We almost disbanded last year. We just keep moving from town to town."

Neubauer said the Bay Players' shows are often performed at several different sites including, Duxbury High School, the middle school, and also, the Ellison Center.

"We could always depend on the high school until the last few years," Neubauer said. "But now, the high school stage is being used more. The best thing would be if we could get a theater of our own. That's our dream. There's a lot of people here with a lot of ideas. We work very hard, and this almost killed us over the past year."

But Neubauer isn't losing faith that the theater company will hang in and continue to be a big part of community theater on the South Shore.

"We still have members from 13 different South Shore communities," Neubauer said.

De Lorenzo, a Boston-based cabaret singer who grew up in South Weymouth, has spent that past three years developing a tribute musical revue series titled "Found Treasures" and "More Found Treasures." The concept is to pull from the depths of obscurity little-known songs from the last half-century's worth of Broadway and musical theatre productions — most of them less than successful in their day — and dust them off for ready audiences who would not likely hear them otherwise.

The art of cabaret singing, an emotionally honest, heart-on-the-sleeve type of vocal performance art, is something that De Lorenzo would like to revive in the Boston area. He's currently attempting to carry out his mission not only with occasional

Landscaping basics

Part 3 — The site analysis

By Suzanne Mahler

A touch of spring is in the air on this glorious day in late February. Balmy breezes, the warmth of the afternoon sun and longer daylight hours combine to kindle spring fever as South Shore gardeners anxiously await the magical rebirth of their landscapes and the opportunity to cultivate the soil. Crocuses can be found pushing their way up through the soil, moist earth alongside daffodil foliage which emerged earlier in the season during the unseasonable warmth of December. Cold and snow are likely to return, but the realization that spring will soon be present in all its grandeur makes these temporary relapses bearable.

Green thumbs up

An early spring day is an ideal time to begin the process of developing your personal landscape master plan. In new subdivisions, homeowners face the challenge of starting their plans from scratch with nothing more than a few native trees and shrubs surrounding a barren piece of recently graded terrain. Older properties may require a face-lift to modify an overgrown or ineffective, nonfunctional landscape. Just as many families periodically remodel their interior living spaces with updated bathrooms, kitchens, carpeting or furniture, the outdoor living spaces often require redesign as needs change or plants mature.

Once you have discussed and outlined your family's immediate needs and long-range goals, a careful site analysis will help you to develop a comprehensive program. Consider both the aesthetic and functional aspects of your landscape and how they relate to your ability to move comfortably from one space to another around your property. Your master plan must blend your family's needs with your property's ability to meet these desires if the design is to be successful.

Inspect your grounds and evaluate your space and any existing features, always keeping in mind your anticipated activities. As you perform your initial survey, inventory the prominent elements including buildings, paved areas, fences, walls, rock outcroppings, water features, utilities, underground lines and large trees or shrub masses. Any or all of these features may be part of your present landscape.

To facilitate this process, it is usually helpful to draw a map. A rough sketch can be used in the beginning, but it may be advisable to create a more precise diagram using a tape measure to locate primary elements. A simple plot plan, which may be on record at your town hall, can often serve as an ideal base plan. Existing surface features, hardscape and other pertinent data can be easily transferred to this base plan.

In addition to the physical aspects of your property, it is essential to take into account light and wind exposure, drainage patterns, soil conditions, and views, both positive and negative. These should be noted on a supplemental list or recorded directly on your drawing. Be sure to include a north point indicator. Remember that as day length increases, the sun will be higher in the sky and light will change as the seasons progress. Any evaluation done during the dormant winter months should also recognize the absence of foliage on deciduous trees and shrubs which may affect the availability of light during the warmer months.

Your ultimate objective is to bring order and unity to your property while creating an aesthetically pleasing environment. Once you have noted existing features, sunny, shady, or wet areas, unsightly views, etc., and listed the various activities and functions planned for your yard, you may want to designate separate areas for your family's private use, such as your backyard, from those which will have public access and determine a means of defining these spaces with shrubbery or fences. Be sure to provide an area to store trash, tools, a boat, establish a compost pile or hang laundry if any of these are part of your family's needs and allow for reasonable access to these areas. Try to estimate the amount of space required for each.

The next step is similar to putting together a puzzle or arranging furniture in a room of your house and, in fact, many designers refer to our landscapes as a series of outdoor rooms. Circulation should be an integral part of your master plan in conjunction with the functional and aesthetic aspects necessary to meet the particular needs of your family. Move the pieces of the puzzle around the space until they fit. Try to work sensibly with nature matching your functional and aesthetic spaces with appropriate existing conditions, when possible. Use an open area of rich, loamy soil for a garden. Consider hardscape in areas of sand, gravel or heavily compacted soils. Avoid densely shaded spaces when selecting a site for a pool or vegetable garden. Try to maximize and efficiently use the space as it currently exists, making as few major changes as possible while fulfilling your needs. This thoughtful, systematic approach can save costly and perhaps unnecessary alterations to your landscape.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

Most people are already familiar with astrological sun signs — those presumed indicators of personality and future. There are, however, much more telling influences, as anyone who has studied astrology knows.

I try to do something a little different with my astrological forecasts. I like to compare astrology with meteorology. Just as meteorologists predict the physical weather — if there will be sun or precipitation — an astrologer can forecast the mental and emotional weather ahead.

A meteorologist tells you whether to bring an umbrella or sunglasses to work. By charting the course of the heavens and the various effects of celestial spheres on the human condition, I can tell you what type of day we are likely to have and how people are likely to react. My goal is to help you be prepared for the week ahead.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 1

New starts are off limits during the first two weeks of March. Planetary influences ease up considerably after the fifteenth, and the remainder of the month rates high across the board. Today in inactive Capricorn moon prompts you to stay busy with practical matters. Finish old, abandoned projects, go on a cleanup campaign. Get your life in order. An alignment of the sun and Mercury retrograde may shed new light on situations that have been troubling you.

THURSDAY, MARCH 2

Conflicting planetary influences make for a day that can go either way. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. The moon enters Aquarius at 8:14 a.m. Keep an open mind; be willing to try new methods, ideas, techniques to solve old problems. A harmonious alignment of the sun and Saturn at 3:19 p.m. aids discipline and focus. Take a break between 5:00-8:00 p.m., when the moon aligns with dreamy Neptune. A challenging 90-degree alignment of the sun and Pluto affects the evening. Take quiet time out for yourself. Let go of old problems and behaviors. Consider ways you can experience renewal.

FRIDAY, MARCH 3

The combination of an Aquarius moon and Venus/Uranus alignment sets the stage for an exciting social day. However, a lunar alignment to Saturn can make for a rough start. You may experience delays or obstacles this morning. Go with your adventurous side; be more spontaneous. The remainder of the day rates high for social activities, group efforts, community endeavors. Forget your troubles and go for the good times tonight. At 8:12 p.m. the moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive.

SATURDAY, MARCH 4

This day rates high for relaxing and enjoying favorite pastimes, spending quality time with friends. The moon continues inactive travel in Aquarius until 6:30 p.m. If you have work projects to accomplish, finish old business rather than starting anything new. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 6:30 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces. Plan a quiet evening.

SUNDAY, MARCH 5

The dark side of a Pisces new moon affects this day. Others may be moody, hypersensitive. This is a time for cleaning out, letting go. Be sure to spend time alone. Reflect on and learn from past experiences; take time to rest and process.

MONDAY, MARCH 6

The new moon comes together at 12:17 a.m., 16-degrees of Pisces. This new moon culminates close to the zodiacal area that Mercury began retrograde travel; its influence can resurrect old issues and put a new light on them. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 12:17 a.m. for the remainder of the day. Avoid working on jobs that require mental precision and attention to detail. Instead, focus on arts and crafts projects, music, dance, poetry. You can achieve breakthroughs and find new ways to express yourself. Get extra rest tonight.

TUESDAY, MARCH 7

At 1:54 a.m. the moon enters fiery Aries. In addition, a harmonious alignment of Mars/Uranus generates a quick pace this morning. If you are well-organized, you can be most productive. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion. Although this is not a time for launching new activities, it is prime for doing things over again, like repainting a room or making repairs.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 8

Gear up for another fast-paced day. Channel high energy constructively. Carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. Tackle old abandoned projects and get them out of the way. An applying alignment of Mercury and Jupiter urges you to be more open-minded and intuitive; you can cut through obstacles and work out glitches that have been holding back progress. The Aries moon aligns with Venus at 9:34 p.m. and becomes inactive.

The Return of the Dessert Soufflé

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Let's be honest. When was the last time you made a dessert soufflé?

In the early 1970's? When Julia Child's TV show was still being broadcast in black and white? Or perhaps you have never made one at all, passing the recipe over as some outmoded bit of French frippery. Having spent many months working on a simple master recipe, I can promise you that they are not only simple to make but also foolproof if you use the proper techniques.

Most of the work can be done ahead of time, just the whipping of whites and folding saved for the last minute. Best of all, when made properly, soufflés are creamy not foamy, stable, not sensitive to an errant footfall, and rich in flavor, not airy and tasteless.

The first question to be answered was what sort of base to use - the creamy, rich batter which is folded into whipped egg whites and baked. The obvious choice is a béchamel (a classic French sauce made with equal amounts of butter and flour whisked with milk over heat), which takes just a few minutes to make, is thick and creamy, and can easily be flavored. For a soufflé, egg yolks are then beaten into the béchamel to create a rich base into which beaten egg whites are folded. That being said, I thought I would try two alternative bases – pastry cream (egg yolks beaten with sugar and then heated with milk) and a bouillie (flour cooked with milk or water until thickened)– just to see if they were any good.

Unfortunately, these versions were too dense and pudding-like. I found that I consistently preferred the béchamel base. It provided the soufflé with good flavor and a puffed yet substantial texture. I also tested whether to use a heavy or medium béchamel and found that the heavy version was best since the medium béchamel produced a spongy soufflé with weak flavor. (A heavy béchamel is made with 3 tablespoons each of flour and butter plus one cup of milk, a medium bechamel uses 2 tablespoons each of flour and butter, and a light béchamel uses only one tablespoon each.)

I was also curious to discover whether milk was the right choice for the béchamel as opposed to heavy cream, an ingredient favored by some chefs. When tested, I did not care for the heavy cream soufflé; the flavor seemed dull compared to the livelier soufflé made with milk. I also tried half milk and half heavy cream and this was perfectly good but the milk version was simpler and still sufficiently rich.

Next, I tested the proportion of egg whites to yolks and discovered that recipes were all over the lot on this point. Eight whites to 4 yolks (the whites are whipped; the yolks are beaten into the béchamel), a common ratio in cookbooks, was disappointing. The soufflé was light and foamy with little flavor or richness. Seven whites was better but 6 whites to 4 yolks produced a rich, luxurious texture. Oven temperatures were tested and 375 degrees was best since I wanted the edges set at the point that the center was still loose – lower temperatures produced a dull, evenly cooked soufflé and higher temperatures overcooked the edges and undercooked the center.

For the whites, the key was to stabilize the foam so that it would not be destroyed during folding or if the soufflé was handled roughly during baking. After many hours of testing, I found that adding cream of tartar and sugar to the whites as they were being beaten produced an unusually stable foam. It is easier to mix these two ingredients together rather than add them separately; cream of tartar added by itself often ends up on the side of the mixing bowl.

Knowing when a soufflé is done is a bit tricky. Forget my oven times since all ovens bake differently. Look for a browned top crust which is set but the soufflé should wiggle just a bit when the dish is gently prodded. The center of the soufflé should be wet and creamy – it makes its own sauce – while the outside should be set. Do not cook the soufflé until the whole mixture is solid since the loose center adds much flavor and richness to the dish.

Simple Dessert Souffle

To prepare this recipe in individual ramekins, bake for about 18 minutes. When tested on the bottom oven rack, this soufflé was a disaster. The bottom was ruined and the outside was burned. It is best to bake a soufflé on the middle rack (the upper position is often too close to either the top of the oven or the electric coils in an electric oven). I find that it is best to heat the oven, prepare the soufflé dish, make the base, whisk in the flavorings, and add the egg whites to the mixing bowl all well ahead of time. Then, 25 minutes before serving, I whip the whites with the cream of tartar and sugar, fold them into the base, fill the soufflé dish, and bake. This last preparation step only takes a couple of minutes.

Butter and sugar for coating dish
3 tablespoons butter
3 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
1/4 teaspoon kosher salt
4 egg yolks

One flavoring recipe (see below)
6 egg whites
1/4 teaspoon cream of tartar
3 tablespoons sugar

1. Heat the oven to 375 degrees. Generously butter the inside of a 1 1/2 quart soufflé dish and add a few tablespoons of granulated sugar to coat inside of dish evenly. Gently shake out excess sugar.

2. Melt the butter in a medium heavy saucepan. Add the flour and whisk for 1 minute over medium heat. Add milk and salt and cook over medium/high heat, whisking constantly, until mixture thickens, about 2 minutes. Remove from heat.

3. Whisk 4 egg yolks into the mixture, one at a time.

4. Stir the flavoring ingredients (see variations below) into the yolk mixture. This part of the recipe can be made well ahead of time.

5. Beat the six egg whites for 30 seconds. Add the cream of tartar to the 3 tablespoons sugar, slowly add to the whites, and beat until whites can hold a 2-inch peak. Stir about 1/4 of the whites into the yolk mixture to lighten and then fold in the remaining whites as gently as possible using a rubber spatula.

6. Turn mixture into the prepared soufflé dish and run a table knife around the perimeter of the soufflé, a half-inch in from the sides. (This helps the soufflé to rise properly.) Bake 25 to 30 minutes, checking soufflé after 20 minutes. The top should be brown but the soufflé should still wiggle a bit when gently shaken and, when cut into, the center should be wet and a bit loose. Serve immediately.

The Bay Players look for permanent home

"Harvey," which opened last weekend at the Duxbury Middle School, is doing well. The production plays again this weekend, both Friday and Saturday night at 8 p.m.

Originally performed on Broadway in 1944, Harvey was written by Mary Chase. It involves a man named Elwood P. Dowd who happens to be "slightly inebriated all the time," and incidentally is friends with a six-foot imaginary rabbit named Harvey.

"The play shows Elwood enjoying every minute of his life," Neubauer said. "It's a very funny show."

The Bay Players' "Harvey" is directed by local resident Peter Kates, who worked on the production as not only the director, but also the set designer.

Neubauer noted a "variety of directors" are used within the theater company for different shows.

The Bay Players have put on a number of comedies over the years, as well as a number of dramas. During its 44 years, the troupe has put on at least three shows annually.

Some of the shows performed over the years include "A Street Car Named Desire," "Spoon River Anthology," "My Fair Lady," "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolfe?," and "The Diary of Anne Frank."

Neubauer explained the Bay Players organization was actually founded to replace an earlier company that hold folded.

"Eight or nine people in the [Duxbury] community came together, and formed the organization," she said. "There was a big gap in the community without a theater company. The first show the Bay Players put on was called 'Happy Time.'"

Neubauer said in addition to a corps of volunteers, the Bay Players attract new performers through new productions.

"We've done a lot of good theater," she said.

Neubauer has held many posts within the theater group over the years including production manager, stage manager, and she has also acted in many of the plays. She has been with the group since 1974 and now serves as the troupe's publicist.

She has high hopes for the theater group despite its recent troubles.

"We've lost a big part of our audience base," she said, "and a lot of our members simply because we don't have a permanent space to put on productions. It's very hard to put on a show when you're not sure where it's going to be performed. Community theater is a lot of work. I've always said it takes a bunch of crazy people to do it."

Crazy or not, through the Bay Players performers become close friends.

"When you work with a bunch of people like this, you get very close," she said. "It's like a big family. That's what I love about it."

For more information on The Bay Players call Neubauer at (508) 747-6758.

NSRWA welcomes best-selling author Mark Kurlansky

world, the Basque people have "always hung on to their culture," Kurlansky noted.

"In the times we live in that's a remarkable thing," he said. "Culture plays a very serious role in their lives. Nothing in the Basque culture has disappeared."

In order to get the background for his Basque book,

Kurlansky traveled to their region several times over the past couple of decades.

"I've been going to Basque country since 1973," he said. "I actually consulted some 25-year old notebooks I had. All my books are usually on subjects I have worked on for a long time."

Ideas that interest him become the subjects of Kurlansky's books. They may not be mainstream, but that doesn't make the author change direction.

"I never try to figure out the book market. For example, everyone thought I was completely crazy when I told them I was writing a book about cod. But if you have something to say, and can bring some passion to it, it usually works."

Best-selling author of "Cod: A Biography of the Fish that Changed the World" Mark Kurlansky will speak at the South Shore Natural Science Center next week.

And to say the least, Kurlansky's book on cod "worked." The fish's fundamental role in this countries economic development is likely one reason.

"Cod is one of the most valued trade commodities in the history of American commerce. Fortunes were made off it. Wars were fought over it. The Basques were the group of people that figured out how to make it a commodity. Cod played a remarkable role in history."

When the Pilgrims first settled in Massachusetts, the economy of the new territory was built around the availability of cod, noted Kurlansky.

"The success of the cod industry at that time is really what fermented the feelings of independence."

Kurlansky said cod also "played a pivotal role in the slave trade," and was even sold as "the first frozen food." Cod also was one of the most preferred foods by Marshfield statesman Daniel Webster.

"Webster evidently thought the subject of chowder was worthy of a speech or two," Kurlansky said. "And there are many chowder recipes that exist today that have been attributed to Webster."

Aside from his success with "Cod" and "The Basque History of the World," Kurlanky has some lesser known books including, "A Continent of Islands: Searching For The Caribbean Destiny" and "The Chosen Few: The Resurrection of European Jewry."

And he is currently working on two new books. One is about "the history of salt," and the other is a collection of short stories about the Caribbean called "The White Man in the Tree."

"I've been writing all my life — as long as I can remember," he said. "I'm doing what I love. For people who are thinking about getting into the business I would say do not get into trying to second guess the market. Write what you care about and what you believe in as honestly as you can. Be very wary of advice. It only takes one publisher to notice you."

Mark Kurlansky's presentation is part of the NWRWA's Water Watch Forum Series. The program will begin at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, March 8. For more information the presentation call (781) 659-8168.

SOUTH SHORE REAL ESTATE

What you don't know about property taxes could cost you

Some homeowners may qualify for tax savings

Property taxes are a fact of life, but many homeowners are unaware that they may qualify for a break on the real estate taxes they pay.

Every year, property owners, like it or not, are required to pay taxes that are assessed by the local board of assessors. These property taxes are based on what is known as the "full and fair cash value" of the property.

What many homeowners do not realize is that they have the right to file for an abatement, or a reduction, on their property taxes, if they believe their property has been unfairly assessed. They may also be eligible for other tax savings if they are senior citizens, or veterans, for example.

Homeowners may obtain information on applications, deadlines and procedures for filing for abatements, tax deferrals and exemptions from their local assessor's office.

What does an assessor do? First of all, they are required by state law to list and value all real and personal property. Assessors are elected or appointed at the local level in every city and town. Property is taxed according to its assessed value, which in this state is 100 percent of fair market value.

Assessors are required to submit these values to the state Department of Revenue every three years for certification. Assessors review sales and the market every year to maintain these values. Property taxes are levied every year based on these values.

Assessors do not have the power to raise or lower property taxes nor do they make the laws regarding property taxes. Their job is simply to determine the full and fair cash value of the property and assess taxes in an amount to cover the cost of state and local appropriations.

Some property owners may be eligible for abatements or exemptions. An exemption, according to the state, releases an individual from the requirement to pay all or a fraction of their property taxes. Certain people may qualify for exemptions, such as, the elderly, the blind, minor children of deceased police or firefighters killed in the line of duty, disabled veterans, widows and widowers, and the minor children of a deceased parent.

An exemption, according to the state, releases an individual from the requirement to pay all or a fraction of their property taxes. Certain people may qualify for exemptions, such as, the elderly, the blind, minor children of deceased police or firefighters killed in the line of duty, disabled veterans, widows and widowers, and the minor children of a deceased parent.

Deadlines for abatements are due on or before the due date for payment of the first actual bill. Applications for personal exemptions are due on Dec. 15 or within three months of the mailing of the first bill.

There are no income restrictions or total asset limitations on some personal exemptions. The surviving spouse and/or surviving minor children of a police officer or firefighter killed in the line of duty are eligible for these exemptions provided that the real estate is owned and occupied by the surviving spouse or the surviving minor children.

Exemptions may also be available to senior citizens, widows and widowers and to qualified minors who have a deceased parent. Some of the requirements are that the applicant must be 70 years old or older by July 1 of the tax year for which the exemption is being sought. There are also requirements regarding how many years the applicant must own the property.

The elderly may also be eligible for tax deferrals. This allows the homeowner to defer payment on property taxes. Different from an exemption, these property taxes must be paid.

If eligible, the homeowner may defer payment on all or part of the taxes plus 8 percent interest until the deferred tax and interest reaches 50 percent of the property's value. An applicant must be 65 years or older by July 1 of the year in which the application is made. Generally, income may not exceed $20,000 in the calendar year preceding the year of application.

Local boards of assessors should be contacted for more information about exemptions and deferrals and to receive an application.

The state also provides a personal exemption for those property owners who are legally blind. They must be legally blind as of July 1 of the tax year and they must be registered with the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind.

Veterans may qualify for tax exemptions from $250 to $950. Veterans and their spouses may be eligible provided they meet certain qualifications. An applicant must have been a resident of the state before entering the military service or have lived in the state for at least five years before filing for the exemption. A total exemption is allowed for paraplegic veterans.

For more information about tax exemptions and deferrals contact The Mass. Association of Assessing Officers, 243 Water St., Quincy, Mass. 02169.

Homeowners may obtain information on applications, deadlines and procedures for filing for abatements, tax deferrals and exemptions from their local assessor's office.

Title insurance should cover mistakes made by title examiner

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

There's much wisdom in the old saying, "the buyer needs a hundred eyes; the seller not but one (George Herbert)." What was true in 1600 is still valid today, especially relative to the purchase of real estate. In the State Supreme Court case of National Lumber Co. v. LaFrancois and Dean and Stephanie Schwartz, a myopic title exam proved to be an expensive oversight, pun intended.

Anthony Summers

Background

In January 1995, LaFrancois Construction Company purchased a lot in Northborough with the plan of building a home for resale.

On Sept. 21, 1995, National Lumber and LaFrancois signed a contract where National Lumber agreed to supply the lumber and materials for the construction of a house on the property.

On Oct. 25, 1995, National Lumber recorded a notice of the contract in the Worcester County Registry of Deeds. The notice specified that the contract was to be completed on or before Dec. 1, 1995.

On Dec. 14, 1995, LaFrancois sold the property to Dean and Stephanie Schwartz.

On Dec. 18, 1995, National Lumber recorded a sworn statement of account in the registry. The statement claimed that $26,103.98 was still owed by LaFrancois.

On Feb. 5, 1996, National Lumber started suit to collect on its contract.

On Aug. 28, 1996, National Lumber added the Schwartzes as defendants.

Now the Schwartzes found themselves embroiled in a lawsuit between National Lumber and LaFrancois. The Schwartzes were understandably upset. After all, they had purchased a new home from LaFrancois and had paid the full purchase price. They had no more money to spare, certainly not $26,000.

Discussion

The ABC's of purchasing property mandates that the buyer do a full and complete title examination prior to the purchase. The results of the title exam will indicate whether the property has any claims which could affect the new buyer. Massachusetts has a Mechanics Lien Statute which allows a supplier of construction materials to record a notice of unpaid balance still due. Once the notice is property filed, it becomes a claim on the property. If a buyer purchases the property after the builder's notice is recorded, the balance due the builder becomes a lien on the property. So, if the supplier is not paid, he/she can sell the property and use any proceeds to pay off the outstanding bills even though the property has been sold.

Decision

Since National Lumber's notice of contract was on record at the time the Schwartzes purchased the property, either somebody (probably the Schwartzes) must pay National Lumber or the Schwartzes' home can be sold to pay National. The Schwartzes must pay National or their home will be sold.

Legal advice: The Schwartzes probably hired an attorney, who probably hired a title examiner to make sure there were no liens on the property. Somehow, the National Lumber notice escaped detection. As a result, the Schwartzes purchased a home which was encumbered by a $26,000 lien. Hopefully, they also purchased an owner's title insurance policy which would have to pay off the National Lumber lien. The purchase of real estate is a minefield waiting for a misstep. Not only does a buyer need a hundred eyes, but those eyes must be wide open and experienced.

IN BRIEF

Conway Commercial brokers sales in Randolph and W. Bridgewater

Conway Commercial recently brokered the sale of the Glad Acres retail/office complex on Route 106 in West Bridgewater.

Vice President Paul Durgin represented the seller, Allied Properties Inc., and assisted the buyer, Glad Acres Realty Trust, in the $1,050,000 transaction.

Glad Acres contains a mix of retail and professional tenants, along with a daycare facility. The building has approximately 26,000 square feet of space on two levels, and sits on more than four acres of land. Built in 1989, the complex was fully occupied at the time of the sale, Durgin said.

Also brokered was the sale of a convenience store building on Route 139 in Randolph.

Durgin represented the seller, Richard Jerrier, and assisted the buyers, Susan Werner and William O'Connor, in the $330,000 transaction.

The property is directly across from the MBTA commuter rail station. Containing approximately 2,600 square feet, the building will be completely remodeled and opened as a new convenience store, Durgin said.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway and Company. Founded in 1957, the company has more than 600 agents in 36 offices from Boston to Cape Cod.

Hingham temple welcomes author Julius Lester

By Alison Cohen
CORRESPONDENT

Julius Lester has done it all. He's been a musician, a Civil Rights activist, a teacher, an author and a lay religious leader. What you may not know is that this black man with the engaging smile and musical laugh is also a Jew by heritage and by choice.

In "Lovesong: Becoming a Jew," one of the 30 books he has written and published, Lester recounts his long journey to discover and realize his religious identity. Lester will share his story with local residents when he speaks at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham on Friday night, March 3 and again on Saturday morning, March 4.

In some ways, Lester was recovering a heritage. His great, great grandfather on his mother's side was a German Jew, a fact of life that had been part of his family history since he was seven years old. But Lester's religious upbringing was far from Jewish. Born in 1939, Lester grew up in the Midwest and South as the son of a Methodist minister. Although his father had died before Lester made his formal conversion in 1982, he says he never felt any disapproval or negative attitudes from his family and friends.

"They have always been very accepting of me," Lester says.

Asked how long it took for him to come to the decision to convert, Lester answers simply, "Probably my entire life." He began his formal studies in preparation for conversion in 1980 and became a Jew in 1982.

Lester's search for religious identity is a continuing journey. As he says, he subtitled his book "Becoming a Jew" very intentionally.

One is always in the process of becoming," he says. "I would not want to stop."

Lester is a full professor of Judaic and Near Eastern studies at UMass-Amherst. He also teaches courses in the English and history departments. Lester became a professor at UMass in 1971, although not in the Judaic studies department until 1988. He began teaching courses about Judaism and Near Eastern religions by the late 1970s, before his conversion.

Lester believes his personal religious search both informs and enriches his teaching.

"It certainly gives me a knowledge base," he says. He continues his studies even now and also serves as a lay religious leader at Beth El Synagogue in St. Johnsbury, VT.

If the past is prologue and the child is father to the man, Lester's book is a very long and rich. He spent much of his formative years in the South, where he confronted deeply ingrained attitudes about race and segregation firsthand. In 1960, he graduated from Fisk University with a degree in English. In the mid-60s, he joined SNCC, or the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee. He was head of SNCC's photo department.

Lester's photographs compelling photographs of that moment in time have been included in an exhibition at the Smithsonian Institution and are part of the permanent photographic collection at Howard University. Lester's photographic eye and creative spirit have also been put to use in television productions.

Lester is also a musician. He recorded two albums and performed with the some of the country's premiere folk and protest singers, such as Phil Ochs, Pete Seeger and Judy Collins. His first book, "The 12-Strong Guitar as Played by Leadbelly – an Instructional Manual" explored the world of black folk music.

Lester also worked as a radio announcer and talk show host in New York about 30 years ago.

Rick Small of Scituate grew up listening to Lester try to confront the schism between Jews and black Americans, exploring the cultural divide between the two groups.

"Julius Lester applied the balm of open debate to this, by now, raw social wound," Small wrote in the Congregation Sha'aray Shalom bulletin. "He wanted to help stop the bleeding by establishing mutual respect and understanding for the analogous historical sufferings of both the black and Jewish people."

It was a noble effort, but not particularly successful. The lines had been drawn, attitudes hardened and feelings hurt.

Before moving on to UMass-Amherst, Lester taught at the New School for Social Research for two years before moving on to UMass-Amherst in 1971.

This was also the period of time in which Lester's career as an author took off, but he says he began writing long before the first book was published. In an interview with Amazon.com, the Internet bookseller, Lester says he's not sure what led him to become an author, just a steadily growing certainty that it was what he was supposed to be doing that began when he was 17.

Lester's early books were for adults, but he soon discovered a new audience in younger readers. Of the 30 books he's published, 21 are for children.

Ask him why children and he first responds, "Why not?" Then he goes on to explain.

"They are a wonderful audience and they deserve the best books that can be written," Lester says. "I enjoy writing for them.

Lester's list of books is as varied as it is long. He's written true life stories about black cowboys, about slavery in the United States and retold old favorites such as the folk tales about African-American folk hero John Henry and the shenanigans of Br'er Rabbit, Br'er Bear and Br'er Fox.

One of Lester's more controversial – and critically acclaimed – efforts was to rewrite "Little Black Sambo" to remove the racism and leave intact the story about a little boy who finds courage and the presence of mind to outsmart some hungry tigers aiming to make him lunch.

Lester's put his religious studies and storytelling skills to good use in writing "When the Beginning Began: Stories about God, the Creatures, and Us." In a book aimed at children in grades 4 through 8, Lester explores the story of creation fusing Biblical scholarship and the irreverent storytelling traditions common to both African-American and Yiddish culture. While the story of the creation of the world and big troubles in the Garden of Eden are familiar, Lester's treatment of them is not.

Lester follows in a long Jewish tradition of exploring the meaning of the Bible through a variety of methods. Lester's playful inventiveness allows readers to see the old familiar Bible stories from a number of perspectives, and finally come to some conclusions about what lessons can be drawn from the ancient texts and applied to modern life.

In this book, Lester shows us a God of many faces, changing from male to female to a ribbon of light. We see God learning the hard way that "Just because you can make something, it doesn't mean that you should." We see an exasperated Lilith, the first woman God created, stalking out of Eden when Adam is too stubborn and pig-headed to compromise, a turn of events that leads God to conclude women will have to be smarter than men. In analyzing the Fall from Innocence, Lester concludes the real sin committed by Adam and Eve, or Chavah in this text, is their failure to take responsibility for their disobedience.

Julius Lester

Lester's newest children's book, "Pharaoh's Daughter: The Mother of Moses," retells the story of Moses form the time he is plucked from the river by the pharaoh's daughter to his flight to Midian. Rather than look at Moses, the leader of his people, Lester focuses on the first person in history to have an identity crisis.

"He grew up Egyptian, but he was Jewish," Lester explains. "A lot of other people, both Jews and non-Jews can identify with that, with the feeling you were born one thing but feel you are something different."

Lester own life experience is woven into the fabric of "Pharaoh's Daughter." It is a book he began "way back in 1979," the same time frame in which he was embarking on the formal process of conversion.

Lester also has written evocatively about people who were slaves. In doing so, he feels that he is giving a voice and bearing witness to the lives of people who were oppressed and kept voiceless.

Asked once why he writes, Lester responded, "I write because the lives of all of us are stories. If enough of those stories are told, then perhaps we will begin to see that our lives are the same story. The differences are merely in the details."

Lester takes his readers, even the very youngest, very seriously as well.

"I believe that children think about the big questions of life, but we don't give children credit of thinking about those things. Just because that don't have the vocabulary or the concepts to identify what they are thinking about doesn't mean they do not understand or think about them," Lester says. "It is my job as a writer to give them the words to express themselves."

Lester does not divide his life up into tidy chapters labeled "When I was a musician," "When I was a Civil Rights activist," "When I was a writer." He says he was always involved in many things, all at the same time, although some would take a more dominant role in his life at times. He hasn't found it difficult to balance the competing demands for his attention. In many ways, he says, each was influenced and enriched by the other things he was doing.

"My mother used to tell me as a child that I was spreading myself too thin," he says. "I told her that if God hadn't meant be to be doing them, he wouldn't have given me the ability."

And what abilities he has displayed. Still, Lester dismisses the accolades and honors as nice, but hardly essential. When he writes or lectures, he is not concerned about promoting himself.

"I want people to know more about themselves, to be more responsible for themselves and to know more about their soul," he says.

On Friday night, March 3, Professor Julius Lester will speak about his path to Judaism at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom. Saturday morning he returns to Sha'aray Shalom to tell tales and talk about the midrashic tradition of explaining Biblical text. Following his presentation, he will answer questions during an informal "schmooze session" and luncheon. Both the Friday night service, which begins at 8 p.m., and the Saturday morning program at 10 a.m. are open to the general public, both Jewish and non-Jewish. There is no charge for either program.

Those who wish to attend the luncheon and meet Lester should call for reservations as soon as possible. The luncheon is $7 per person.

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom is located at 1112 Main St., Hingham. For more information, luncheon reservations or directions, please call the office at 79-8103.

Don't risk ruining your vacation

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. We booked a cruise for new year's 2000. Our flight to Miami was canceled and we missed our ship. The airline got us to the ship three days later. We booked everything through the cruise line.

Who is responsible for the days we missed and all the inconvenience that we encountered?

A. You're in much better shape because you bought the fare through the cruise line and not on your own, so the cruise line should assume some responsibility. In most cases, cruise lines will compensate you with a prorated discount for a future cruise if you miss a portion of your cruise, or offer to rebook you on a future cruise if you miss it entirely.

It's often a fine line, and there's no set policy.

For all of you contemplating a cruise: It's a very good idea to ask "what if" when you book your cruise. It's also a really good idea to take out an insurance policy from a company like Access America that includes "missed connection" coverage, according to Nancy Yale, a cruise consultant at Fairfield, Conn.-based Cruise and Resort Connection.

"Don't buy the cruise line's insurance policy since it often doesn't include this," she warns.

And it's always a good idea, especially in periods of uncertain weather, to arrive at your cruise embarkation point a day early. Why risk ruining your vacation?

Q. My brother and I are looking for a cheap fare to Singapore, under $1,000 round-trip. Where should we begin?

A. Actually, how about a cheap fare and a vacation for under $1,000?

Until March 31, Singapore Airlines and Asian Affair Holidays, (800) 742-3133, will fly you to Singapore for $888 round-trip from New York, San Francisco or Los Angeles), and throw in four nights at the Singapore Mandarin Hotel, transfers from the airport, full American breakfast and a half-day sightseeing tour. Prices are based on double occupancy.

Of course, if you really just want the airfare, just don't use the rest of the package.

Q. My fiancée and I will be getting married this summer and we would like to know if there are any cruise lines that will not accept passengers under the age of 21 (we are both 20).

A. According to Karen Bohning, spokeswoman for the Cruise Lines International Association, you shouldn't have any problem on any CLIA-affiliated line, which includes most cruise lines. She notes that Carnival doesn't allow people under 18 to travel unless they're sharing a cabin with someone 25 or older.

Q. I have a ticket that I can't use and I would like to sell it or trade it. The value of the ticket is $133. What are my options?

A. Unfortunately, if it's a nonrefundable ticket, most airlines don't allow you to trade, sell or get a full refund on a ticket. You can apply the value minus a change fee (usually $75) toward future travel, in the original passenger's name, on the same airline, however.

There are a few exceptions: Southwest Airlines allows you to apply the full amount of your fare to future travel. If it's an electronic ticket, you can apply the credit to anyone; if it's a paper ticket, you can only apply the credit to the original passenger (this very liberal policy is another good reason for flying with Southwest, in addition to their on-time record).

Midwest Express Airlines does allow you to transfer a ticket to someone else for a $75 fee.

nightclub and theatre performances locally, but also as vice-president of the Boston Association of Cabaret Artists (BACA) and editor of the organization's newsletter.

"I came up with the idea for 'Found Treasures' by almost accidentally running across some records of Broadway songs that I had never heard of," said De Lorenzo. "And I thought at the time that it would be nice to use these songs in some sort of cabaret setting."

The occasion, De Lorenzo recalls dates back to 1989, when he was performing in cruise-line musical revues aboard the M.S. Westerdam off the coast of Alaska and British Columbia. The idea for a cabaret program of old, forgotten theatre tunes came as the singer was noticing the large numbers of them while browsing the used-record bins of an old Vancouver music shop on an off afternoon.

De Lorenzo took much of what he dug up that afternoon and later put it together as the material for "Found Treasures" and "More Found Treasures," the first of these shows which the singer debuted at Cambridge's Blacksmith House on Brattle Street in April, 1997. De Lorenzo has since performed his "Treasures" revues at such venues as the Cambridge Center For Adult Education and the now-closed InStages in Boston and the Theatres Pegasus and Eighty-Eight's in New York.

Most recently, De Lorenzo has offered a keepsake for fans of this particular thread of American music by releasing his debut CD, "Found Treasures", on his own Boston-based Cabaret Classics label. Typically enough, the disc draws its material by tapping into the archives of lost, short-lived Broadway and theatre productions, most notably Angel, a 1978 Broadway attempt by the writers of Shenandoah, Gary Geld and Peter Udell. From this could-have-been production come the lilting, Tin Pan Alley-ish gems "How Do You Say Goodbye" and "Astoria Gloria," which cleverly rhymes "girl of my dreams/why do you have to live way out in Queens?"

Elsewhere, the disc mixes its show sources among the generally familiar and the virtually-for-Broadway-buffs-only productions from "Oliver!" and "The Fantasticks" to "Dear World," "Carnival" and many others of the hard-to-find level, and writers — the most familiar of which include Richard Rodgers, Stephen Sondheim and Barry Manilow. Even one selection from Cabaret, "Why Should I Wake Up?," is one that, as De Lorenzo informs, is no longer used in current or recent productions of the show.

Debuting the CD at a recent release-party performance at the Boston club Scullers, De Lorenzo heartily mixed disc material with other overlooked, underrated items by Sondheim, Oscar Hammerstein and others before an enthusiastic packed room, vocalizing and candidly emoting over the solid instrumental support of his regular pianist Doug Hammer.

"Most people who frequent cabaret shows like the familiar, fondly remembered songs. But many like the sense of adventure with new, unfamiliar material as well," De Lorenzo said.

"In New York, where Broadway and cabaret have always fit together so well, there's so much of a cabaret circuit and specific audiences for the genre and its venues. Broadway musicals in general are doing better now than ever and a lot of the actors in the shows will often perform after-hours in the cabarets. In Boston, the scene is much different, mostly because there are no clubs or rooms specifically geared toward cabaret or the style of music. Jazz and classical music are well-attended, but it's a real challenge to cabaret performers in the city for the time being. But there is talent in the area for this sort of music and we're working hard with the organization to get that recognition."

To these ends, the Boston Association of Cabaret Artists conducts an ongoing promo campaign for the music by holding regular workshops and open-mike nights and publicizing the annual "Cabaret Month" each March.

Lorenzo's next performance is Saturday, March 4 at 8 p.m. at the Blacksmith House in Cambridge where he'll be joined by special guest Robert Saoud and Doug Hammer on piano. De Lorenzo returns to the Blacksmith House the following Friday, March 10 for an 8 p.m. performance with special guest Nicole Kempskie. On March 25, De Lorenzo will put on "More Found Treasures" including songs from his "Found Treasures" debut at Caesar's Bistro at the Regency Suites Hotel in Worcester. De Lorenzo's CD can be ordered by mail — $16 plus 80 cents sales tax and $2 for shipping from Cabaret Classics Records, 8 Worcester Square, Boston 02118-2933.

Bradley, McCain the big local winners

Cohasset and Hingham both favor national underdogs

By Brian Brennan and Carol Britton Meyer
STAFF WRITERS

Vice-President Al Gore and Texas Gov. George W. Bush may have been the big winners nationally in the group of state primaries known as 'Super Tuesday', but Hingham and Cohasset voters showed their independent spirit, favoring former New Jersey senator Bill Bradley and Arizona senator John McCain in Tuesday's presidential primary.

McCain defeated Bush handily in both towns in the Republican primary. McCain won by a margin of better that 2 to 1 in Cohasset, receiving 860 votes to 407 for Bush. In Hingham, McCain also won by a 2 to 1 margin, gaining 2,105 votes to Bush's 1,050.

Barry proposes landfill solution

Says recycling-transfer station could spell end to CHL litigation

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

Cohasset Heights Landfill owner Paul Barry has proposed a recycling-transfer facility as the solution to the ongoing legal battles between CHL and the town concerning further expansion of the landfill, which has been closed for nearly two years.

Barry presented selectmen with the proposal last Tuesday, saying it would absolve the town of the legal fees it has incurred concerning Area 5 of the landfill, where Barry had hoped to expand. Area 5 has been the subject of litigation since the board of health denied it a site assignment in 1998.

"This proposal would put a cap on my landfill and put an end to the legal fees which are hurting the town," Barry told selectmen. "I don't think a commercial transfer station would be the worst solution for the town of Cohasset."

Barry said the proposed transfer station would have a sealed floor on which small trucks would dump loads to be sorted for recycling. Metals and clean woods would be separated and recycled, while material which could not be recycled would be shipped away in larger trucks.

Selectmen did not comment on Barry's proposal on Tuesday night, which came at the end of the board's meeting.

Selectman Thomas Callahan, a member of the town's CHL negotiating committee, said yesterday he expected the committee to discuss Barry's proposal at its meeting today.

Barry said he hopes to garner the support of the residential and busi-

Will SPED deficits continue?

Malvey, school committee discuss budgeting mechanism

By Brian Brennan
STAFF WRITER

The school committee is starting to see a pattern.

Last year, the school department's special education deficit totaled $350,000. This year, town meeting has funded $200,000 in special education deficits for the first half of the school year. Last month, school superintendent Edward Malvey announced a $180,000 deficit for the rest of the 1999-2000 school year.

While it appears the deficit may be funded without having to cut academic programs or lose athletic teams [see sidebar], school committee member Pat Martin is worried the school department will continually be faced with similar special education deficits if it continues to budget the same way.

"This is the third budget I've worked on, and I've seen the special education deficit increase by leaps and bounds every year," Martin said at last Thursday's school committee meeting. "Do we need to create a revolving fund for special education? By law, the kids are going to get these services and we're going to pay the money. Isn't is better to know now than waiting to see where the ax is going to fall?"

"By law, the kids are going to get these services and we're going to pay the money. Isn't is better to know now than waiting to see where the ax is going to fall?"

— School committee member Pat Martin

As it currently stands, the school department budget is level-funded, meaning the school committee determines its budgets based on the costs which are known at that time.

Because students are evaluated throughout the school year, the number of children needing special education services cannot be accurately determined at budget time. Also, the severity of a child's disability and the services a child receives can fluctuate during the school year.

Students needing special education services may also move into town during the school year, while preschoolers, who are eligible for special education, may be referred by parents at any time.

For all these reasons, Malvey said special education deficits will continue to occur if school department budgets are level-funded.

"Since I've been here, the model has been to budget on what you know," Malvey said. "If that continues, we're going to keep seeing deficits."

Martin said the time may have come to look at new ways to fund special education.

"Based on the assumption our budget model is wrong, can't discussions begin with the advisory committee and selectmen on finding a better model?" she said.

In a perfect world, Town Manager Mark Haddad said he would like to set aside funds for special education deficits, but said money isn't available for such expenditures.

"I'd love to have a contingency for special education, just like I'd love
